THOUSANDS CAME

from everywhere. It seemed people from every state primed their time to be in St. Augustine for the show last year. More will come this year because everybody who was there praised it to others. There has been great improvement in the setting in anticipation of the increased crowds.

Ads in all the big Sunday papers in the southeast swells the visitors list from nearby states. It's a natural. The center of antiquity should be the center of antiques. There is the atmosphere. There is the spirit. Come to the shrine that draws collectors like Mecca beckons Mohammedans.

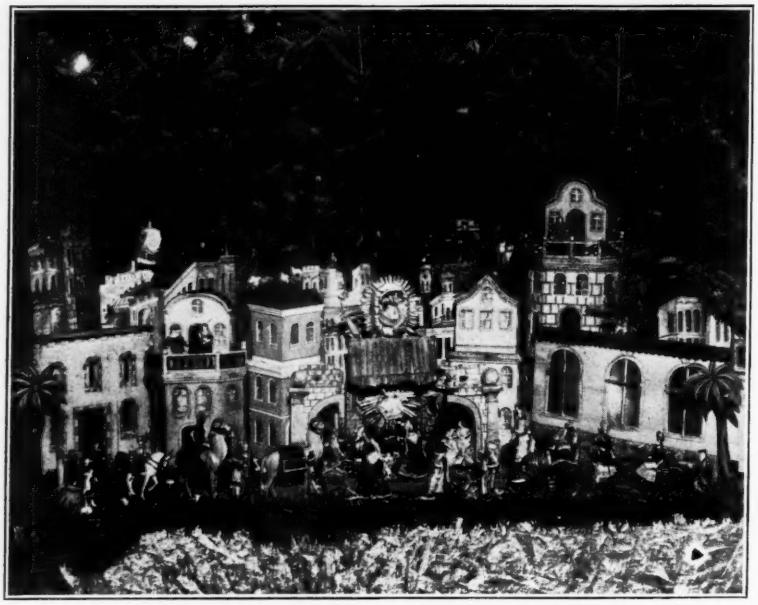
CHRISTMAS CRIBS

By JOHN N. THEN



Two hundred year old crib from Oberammergau

Christmas cribs, or representations of the manger at Bethlehem, are an interesting field for the collector. Many possess real artistic merit and are rich in treasures as well as sentiment. Occasionally one finds an old crib or Creche, which is the French name for them. The Italians call them Presepios, while the Germans call them Krippen and the Spanish Nacimientos. Those made by the peasants of the Tyrol and Italy are especially remarkable.

Not alone the birth of the Saviour, the adoration of the shepherds and the arrival of the Magi or kings (Caspar, Melchior and Baltasar) are in evidence, but the whole village of Bethlehem with numerous houses, tradesmen and peasants at work and temples with high priests. Even a single figure from such a crib is a prized treasure for any doll or figurine collector.

Several Neopolitan Presepio figures about twelve inches in height, and several hundred years old are in my collection. These have terra cotta heads and hands and feet and are dressed in silk and satin costumes. The details are marvelous, such as tiny coral ear rings in the lady's ears, and stubble beard of the man. They represent peasants. The hands are beautifully modeled and are very expressive with fingers spread in a most natural and pleasing manner. But such figures are scarce and not easily found. I got mine in Naples in 1930.

Another interesting and very lovely Nativity Scene is a mother-of-pearl representation made in Bethlehem by the natives who make a specialty of this medium. With the crudest of instruments they produce the most delicate articles. This crib won the sweepstakes at the Minnesota State Fair several years ago.

I have three cribs (Krippen) from Oberammergau, Germany, the home of the Passion Play. These are of carved wood and are most elaborate and complete. One of these cribs is over 200 years old, and it represents the village of Bethlehem. It has about 85 figures, numerous houses, a temple and ruined thatched straw-roofed stable. The figures have carved wood heads, hands and feet and are costumed in silks and cloth. Days and days must have been spent dressing these figures. Age has softened the color of the robes, the gold braids and laces, so that they have a pleasing tapestry-like appearance.

Still another crib from Oberammergau (modern type) has figures carved of wood and is painted. With this crib is a painted background showing buildings of Bethlehem with trees in the distance. This background was painted by Johann Zwink, Sr., a noted artist (now deceased), who played the role of Judas in the Passion Play for three decades. The Zwink family are special friends of mine and it was from them I obtained the antique crib which is over 200 years old.

It is interesting to note that cribs are divided into two classes, the Oriental and the native type. In the latter, the artist takes it for granted that Christ was born in his native country and scenery, people and dress are purely native. The Oriental type follows the story of the birth of Christ. In all the cribs the stable is either the ruins of a building or simply a cave or grotto on the side of a mountain. The stable and the inmates always remain in the center of the scene and the rest is merely a setting arranged to suit the fancy.

Entirely different and most interesting and beautiful in my collection is a crib from old Mexico. The figures are made of fired and beautifully colored clay. They are typically Mexican in type, character and expression, dress and surroundings. One shepherd offers a squash while another has a wild turkey. It is a purely native Nacimiento.

Lucky is the collector who finds old cribs or parts of them. They are real collector's items. Any article connected with one of these old cribs adds value and variety as well as interest to a collection, be it miniatures or dolls or Christmas lore. Even the cheap and crude Plaster of Paris crib figures found in the stores at the Christmas season possess a charm that appeals for what they represent, although they are not always artistic.

Many legends are entwined around the Christmas crib and these I try to follow in arranging and displaying my cribs. For an example, by the camp fire near the stable is found a little robin red breast. Legend has it that when the fire died down the robin revived it by flapping its wings. The glow of the fire reddened the breast of the little bird and as a reward he is privileged to wear a red breast to this day.

In the hand of the smallest shepherd boy is found a single daisy which legend says he found blooming that day and having nothing to offer as a gift, took it to the Christ Child who accepted it and kissed it, causing a crown of yellow to appear in the center of the daisy. That is why the daisy has a raised crown of yellow as a center.

Among the things with my antique crib from Oberammergau is found a little plate with a fish on it. It was years before I found out the connection of a fish with the crib. A legend states that the time of Christ's birth a fisherman was selling fish in Bethlehem and seeing people go to the stable with gifts, followed them. Having nothing to give, he presented the Holy Family with a fish. Later as the Holy Family was being pursued by Herod's soldiers during the flight into Egypt they passed a fisherman's hut. It happened to be the same fisherman who presented them with a fish at Bethlehem. Seeing their danger, he took the Holy Family in his boat and drifted on the water all night. In the meantime Herod's soldier's arrived and searched the fisherman's hut, but not finding anyone, they fled. In the morning the fisherman with his precious cargo landed and thus the Christ Child was saved. During the night the waves rocked the boat gently and lulled the child to sleep and it is said that on each Christmas night the waves of the sea rock the boats peacefully in memory of this event.

With one of my cribs the shepherd's wives are found carrying lace and apples in a basket. Legend says they offered these to the Child in the stable as gifts.

Children love these legends and they enrich a display ever so much. Each year at the Christmas season I display a complete crib and often, parts of others, and they are always much enjoyed and admired.

A crib in a home, or displayed in a church or library or school room or used as a decoration in store windows and at meetings of clubs and Christmas programs provides an endless amount of joy and spreads the real "SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS".

AMERICAN RAILROAD PRINTS

By JOHN RAMSAY

Many collectors of Americana, particularly in books and prints, are interested especially in railroad subjects, as is to be expected, since the Railroad can be considered an American institution, with much romance and excitement in its history. Oliver Evans of Philadelphia was discussing the possibility of steam-propelled railway trains as early as 1786, and John Steven of Hoboken was arguing for a railroad instead of the proposed Erie Canal in 1812. Disgusted with popular indifference to his project, he built a short narrow-guage railway on his estate in 1825, and operated the first steam railway in America. In England, the Stockton & Darlington Road, not a steam railway, was opened in 1825, closely followed by the shorter Quincy Railway, near Boston, which is shown in two lithographs by Pendleton, our first American railroad prints.

The railway age started with a rush. The Mohawk & Hudson, ancester of the New York Central, received its charter in 1826, the Baltimore & Ohio in January, 1827, and the Charleston & Hamburg, forerunner of the Southern, a year later. Six miles of this line were ready in January 1828, and its American-built locomotive, "Best Friend of Charleston" established it as the first commercial steam-operated road in the country, with its first run in January, 1831. The Mohawk & Hudson's first run was on August 9th of that year with the "DeWitt Clinton", and William H. Brown, the Silhouettist best known for his "Portrait Gallery of Distinguished Americans" cut a view of it, which was reproduced in lithographs by Leggot & Co. of New York in 1865, and by J. Sage & Co. of Buffalo. The Baltimore & Ohio's little "Tom Thumb", built by Peter Cooper, made its first trip on August 28th 1831, thus actually ante-dating the others, but an unfortunate race with a horse-drawn car, which it lost, sent the locomotive into temporary disuse on that road.

After these "firsts", railroads came into being all over the country. The first in the Middle West, the Mad River & Lake Sandusky to Springfield, Ohio, was chartered in 1832, and by 1857, a passenger could travel from New York to Saint Louis by rail and twenty-two years later, when the Central Pacific and Union Pacific met on May 10th, 1879, the golden spike driven by the silver sledge united East and West. By then, of course, the railroad was a part of American life, but it is significant that a temperance poster of about 1860, the "Black Valley Railway", lithographed by Bufford, shows sinners going to Hell by train, while the righteous travel in the opposite direction in the stage-coach of their forefathers.

The list of American lithographs of locomotives, trains and railroad subjects is long. The house of Currier, best-known and most prolific of our lithographers, issued some fifty, including negro comics, like the "Nightmare in a Sleeping Car", and some genre subjects, like the "Night Scene at an American Railway Junction" of 1876. Others, the "Railroad Suspension Bridge Near Niagara Falls" and the "Adams Express Train" and "American Express Train"" of 1855 are "news items". There are several which are simply pictures of trains, the six "Express Trains" and the large and fine "American Express Train, Snow-Bound," while still others, like "Pennsylvania Railroad Scenery, Horseshoe Curve" and "Through to the Pacific" are views of American scenery, including trains. And the advertisements, "Lookout Mountain, Tennessee & Chattanooga Railroad", the "Mutual Accident Insurance Co." poster of 1881, and still another American Express Train", large folio of 1858.

The other American lithographers issued similar subjects. An early one is Thomas Campbell's "Thomas Viaduct", on the line of the B. & O., 1835, large folio. There are several "news flashes" particularly J. L. Magee's "Dreadful Accident on the North Penna. Railway, May 6, 1856." Another is "The General, W. & A. Locomotive," medium folio, without imprint, which shows the "victim" of James J. Andrews' raid on the Western and Atlantic Railroad south of Chattanooga, in the Spring of 1862, about which he later wrote a book. There are a large number of local views and scenes which include railroads and trains, special mention due F. Heppenheimer's "Stone Mountain, DeKalb Co., Georgia," large folio, of 1856, because the excursion train in the foreground practically eclipses the mountain. Of course, there are purely railroad subjects, like Haskell & Allen's dramatic large folio "Union Pacific Railroad" of 1872, and Charles Hart's "Pennsylvania Railroad Train at New Brunswick". Even music covers show railroads, including the "Fast Line Galop" with a view of a Pennsylvania R. R. train, and Britton, Rey & Co.s' "New Express Galop" with one of the Union Pacific R. R.

The lithographed advertisements include many of the most interesting railroad prints. A large — 19¼x 28¾ inches, oil lithograph poster of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company of 1886 is "Ten Minutes for Refreshments" an amusing and realistic view of the interior of a crowded railway station. Of the same period is J. W. Brett's "Night Scene on the New York Central Railroad, American Express Company's Special Train", 30x24 and Clay Cosack & Co.'s "The Fast Mail", showing a train of the Lake Shore & Michigan Railway, large folio. is a long oval view "Great Cast Iron Bridge over the Ohio River at Steubenville", which was the heading of a large poster, and H. A. Thomas & Co.'s crowded view of Barnum's circus train in 1876 is also a poster. Other railroad advertisements frequently include small pictures or views with their inciting text, but most of these are printed, not lithographed.

Among the advertisements are a number issued by locomotive builders which are not dramatic or colorful, but exact representations of various types of engines, and, for that reason, valuable. Between 1830 and 1855, the engines were named, which, somehow, adds to their "personality", but the later ones are still steps in the evolution of the modern Dieselburner. First of the builders was William Norris, who established the works at Bush Hill, near Philadelphia in 1831, to be succeeded by his son and grandson as Richard Morris & Son, and whose locomotives were the first to develop real drawing power. Their early "Philadelphia" appears in a lithograph without imprint, and, later, Louis Rosenthal of Philadelphia, a fine lithographer, especially in the field of color work, did their "Express Engine Auburn" in 1851 and others. He also made, for the later and more important Baldwin Locomotive Works, prints of the "President", "Tiger" and others.

Actually, there are a good number of the locomotive pictures. The Boston Locomotive Works, and its predecessors Hinckley & Drury and Hinckley & Williams, sent out prints by Thayer and Bufford of their "Lion", "Hinckley" and un-named types. Other makers, the Portland locomotive works of Portland, Maine, the Lowell had Lawrence Machine Shops and the Taunton and Mason Locomotive Works, both in Taunton, Mass., the Rogers Locomotive Works of Paterson, N. J., the Cincinnati Locomotive Works of Moore & Richardson and Anthony Harkness, all sent out pictures of their "State of Maine", "Fashion", "Rapid", "Camulet", later omitting names, but giving more technical titles, or numbers. Most of these are medium folio or large size, usually printed in oil colors, and carefully detailed drawings, often without background details.

There is a great deal of difference, technically and artistically, between these and the carefully drawn and colored framing prints from the presses of Currier & Ives and others, and the more cheaply and showily executed posters and advertisements. But all are part of the history of railroading in America, and all are interesting to collectors.

Air Museum Plans Materializing

Near the end of the war, General "Hap" Arnold, wartime commander of the Air Force, issued an order to "Save one of everything," meaning one of every kind of Air Force plane and flying gadget.

Those near to the general said that he was dreaming of a museum when he issued the order. Congress expanded his proposal into a National Air Museum, established as a branch of the Smithsonian Institution. The air museum was given legal life on August 12, 1946 when President Truman signed the act. On National Aviation Day, a year later, Congress authorized $50,000 to start the work such as finding a location and buying additional material.

The Air Force already has approximately 160,000 items stored in Park Ridge, Ill., and it is said that the Navy has thousands more stored for the museum when it becomes an actuality.

Memorabilia includes 275 complete aircraft. It is planned to devote one room to Wright Brothers and their accomplishments. It is planned to place the famous "Kittyhawk" in the center of the room. This plane is being returned from England where Orville Wright sent it more than 20 years ago because he felt that the Smithsonian did not accord him the credit that he thought he deserved.

MUSEUM BRIEFS

The Rochester, N. Y., Needlecraft Club celebrated its second anniversary with a dinner recently at the Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences. One of the highlights of the meeting was a display of needlecraft articles by club members. Mrs. Beatrice Farrall Clark, New York State, originator and first president of the club, was guest of honor.

One other recent feature of the museum was an exhibit of valuable Civil War memorabilia, belonging to George J. Bauer of that city. The collection includes a key to the Appomattox Court House, famous as the scene of Lee's surrender to Grant on April 9, 1865, a key to the Appomattox jail, and a tattered and torn Confederate flag which was on the Capitol of Richmond at the time of the surrender.

Old Automobiles, Bicycles, and Vehicles

GLIDDIN TOURISTS, 1908-1948

Bedford, Pa., nestled snugly between the rolling of the Allegheny Mountains was the setting October 11-13 for the 1948 Version of the Glidden Tours. The arrival of some half a hundred "horseless carriages" under the sponorship of the Antique Automobile Club of America on October 11th was the signal for the start of the two-day celebration, the 40th anniversary of the 1908 Gilden Tour to this famous Pennsylvania resort.

Participants in this 1948 Glidden Tour attended from all sections of the country, arriving goggled and dustered over roads far different from those their predecessors, driving similar cars, encountered in 1908.

G. Bland Hoke, manager of the Bedford Springs Hotel, headquarters of the tour, met the guests as they chugged to the portico. He was resplendent in frock coat, high silk hat, striped trousers and sporting the most ornate walrus moustache seen in those parts since his counterpart stood beside the same pillars to welcome the exhausted tourists 40 years before.

Mrs. Hoke was elaborately attired in finery of the early 1900-12 also, and so was virtually the entire staff of the hostelry. The doormen, the room clerks, bell captain, waitresses, all were garbed 1908 styles.

It was reported that the surreys with their pink-coated drivers which moved sedately through the rows of ancient automobiles looked not one whit out of place; although the horses did slightly object to the misty clouds which the Stanley Steamers threw up in passing.

Among the first to arrive were Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Van Sciver, Jr., of Philadelphia driving a 1909 Winton from their collection of antique automobiles. Shortly after their triumphant entrance Walter Marr of Flint, Mich., swept in on his 12 cylinder 1915 Buick. M. J. Duryea, president of the Antique Automobile Club of America, followed closely in his comparatively modern 1921 Cadillac Victoria.

Mr. Duryea's father, Charles Duryea, will be remembered as the inventor and builder of the first automobile engine in America.

Accounts of the Glidden Tour to Bedford Springs in 1908 had been carefully gone over in making preparations for this 1948 renewal of the famous classic of the past. The program which Bland Hoke arranged for the 150 tourists carried out in detail all the elements which were present forty years before. The August 1908 issue of "Horseless Age" spoke glowingly of the tourists' enjoyment of the swimming, golf, and tennis during their stay at the Springs. Not content with being able to offer this year's group the same excellent facilities (and many of them took a swim in the indoor pool) Mr. Hoke had on hand golf clubs and tennis racquets of 1900 vintage just in case some perfectionist cared to try his luck with the old equipment. The golf clubs were from the famous Alec Findlay collection—and included a "waterniblick" with a head shaped like a stunted rake. Apparently people found

Mechanical and Electrical Antiques

PINS

Perhaps the heading of "Pins" cannot be listed as a mechanical or electrical antique, but while we are cogitating on the subject we print here some historical data that Arthur T. Ward, New York City, collector, forwarded to us. It appeared originally in Chamber's Journal for October 22, 1870:

"The pin, unpoetical trifle as it is, points the climax of one of Shakespeare's finest and most pathetic speeches:

"Within the hollow crown
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps Death his court; and there the antic sits,
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
To monarchise, be feared, and kill with looks;
Infusing him with self and vain conceit—
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable; and humoured thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Bores through his castle wall, and — farewell king!

Curiously enough, the poet's mouthpiece is that melancholy specimen of English kings, the Second Richard, whose queen, besides teaching English ladies how to ride in a seemly unmanly fashion, introduced pins to their toilet-tables. 'Queen Anne,' says Miss Strickland, 'made some atonement for importing this hideous fashion (horned caps), by introducing the use of pins, such as are used at our present toilets. Our chroniclers declare that, previously to her arrival in England, the English fair fastened their robes with skewers — a great misrepresentation, for even as early as the Roman Empire the use of pins was known; and British barrows have been opened wherein were found numbers of very neat and efficient little ivory pins, which had been used in arranging the grave-clothes of the dead; and can these irreverent chroniclers suppose that English ladies used worse fastenings for their robes in the fourteenth century? Our lady historian is righteously indignant. Pins of some sort must have been in vogue long before the days of Anne of Bohemia, or pinmakers could scarcely have been in existence; and we find that two 'pynners' were elected to the Common Council of the City of London in the fiftieth year of Edward III's reign. The ordinances of the Pinners appear too in the civic compilation called the White Book, but unfortunately we cannot gather any information from them regarding the wares in which the Pinners dealt: they were probably pins of ivory, bone, and wood, for we should suppose the gold and silver pins ornamented with precious stones used by great folks and the higher ecclesiastics were rather the productions of the jewellers and goldsmiths.

"Among the privy expenses of Elizabeth of York, afterwards married to Henry VII, we find, under the date of 1502:

"Paid John Belly for 300 pins for the queen's letter at 4d. the 100....12d.
Item for Pin Powder.....12d.

"The brass wire pins are generally said to have been imported from France, but from the fact that sundry complaints were made from time to time against divers Flemish merchants for bringing in pins from the Netherlands, we are inclined to believe that the pin, like the thimble, was a Dutch invention. Be this as it may, the English Pinners soon took to the manufacture, and upon their engaging to keep the public well supplied at reasonable prices, an act of parliament was passed in 1542, forbidding the sale of any sort of pins, excepting 'onelie suche as shalbe double-headed, and have the heades soudered faste to the shanke of the pynne well smethed, the shanke well shaven, the pointe well and rounde fyled, canted, and sharped.' The English pinmakers, however, proved unable or unwilling to keep their part of the bargain, and complaints were so loudly made that His Majesty's lieges were not competently served, nor were likely to be, that in 1545 the act was declared 'frustrate and nichillated, and to be repealed for ever.'

"By this time they were in such common use that

"If she were never so foul a dowdy, with her kelles and her pins,
The shrew herself could shroud both her chekey and her chins, while they were cheap enough to be accepted as representative of infinitesimal value. Hamlet declares he does not set his life at a pin's fee; Lucio, urging on the pleading Isabella, says:

"If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire for it;

and that much troubled lady, reproaching her unworthy brother, tells him:

"O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

"Old Tusser rhymes:

"His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then.

"And the phrase, 'I don't care a pin,' is at least as old as Spenser:

"Soon after comes the cruel Saracen,
And sternly looks at him, who, not a pin
Does care for look of living creature's eye.

"Pins and poking-sticks figure among the wares of the merry rogue Autolycus; and the lover in the old ballad says:

"One time I gave thee a paper of pins,
Another time a tawdry lace;
And if thou wilt not gnart me love,
In truth I'll die before thy face;

"Pearl-headed pins were fashionable at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and among the goods and chattels of Lettice, Countess of Leicester, were inventoried silver pins, blue pins, and 'many thousand pins.'

"In 1614, the London pinmakers, desiring to obtain a charter of incorporation, promised Sir Ralph Winwood four thousand pounds, or a moiety of the profits on the commerce in pins, if he would use his influence in their behalf; and two years later, they got their charter confirmed, securing the sole pre-emtion of foreign pins, which were forbidden to be landed at any port but that of London. At this time they were associated with the Wiremakers and Girdlers (makers of girdles or belts), but in 1631 were, at their own desire, separated from them. In 1635, upon the renewal of their privileges by Charles I., the Pinners convenanted to pay His Majesty five hundred pounds a year for ever; which Charles disposed of by giving it as a pension to his queen. Charles II. confirmed this charter upon regaining the throne, and subsequently entered into a curious contract with the Pinners, by which he bound himself to raise twenty thousand pounds to provide a stock of wire, and to take all

Generous Joseph Jefferson

Celebrated Actor Asked No Fee For His Columbia Recordings

From THE COLUMBIA RECORD, May, 1905

"Two years ago, when the late Joseph Jefferson was playing an engagement in New York, President Easton of the Columbia Phonograph Company thought it extremely desirable that some records of his voice should be obtained. It was well understood that certain prejudiced and self-sufficient actors were averse to having records of their voice made for the purpose of selling additional copies of them but it was believed that Mr. Jefferson was not one of them and so it was decided to make an attempt to ensnare the jaunty Bob Acres, and we went about it in this way:

"I wrote a letter to Mr. Jefferson saying that the grandson of the then recently deceased William Ireland, author of several standard works on the drama, would call on him and endeavor to arrange with him to make one or two graphophone records. This grandson — William Ireland Starr, of Bridgeport, Connecticut— is an exceedingly attractive young man and he and Mr. Jefferson became great chums in a very short time. Mr. Jefferson consented to make the records and, notwithstanding he was very busy he went to the laboratory of the Columbia Phonography Company at Sixth Avenue and Twenty-sixth street and made disc master records of two of his speeches in Rip Van Winkle, and afterwards, when a cylinder graphophone was taken to the Fifth Avenue Hotel by Mr. Starr and an assistant from the Record Department, Mr. Jefferson made records for the cylinder machines and they are excellent.

"When Mr. Starr came to the most delicate point of the negotiations— the amount of money Mr. Jefferson would want for his work—he simply patted him on the shoulder and replied: 'Nothing, nothing, my boy. I am very glad indeed to oblige you.' As the Columbia Company had just paid Marcella Sembrich $2000 to sing three songs and was paying all sorts of prices to all sorts of people—to those connected with the Metropolitan Opera House, to the court singers in St. Petersburg, and to artists of great renown in Milan, Berlin, etc.—the generosity of Mr. Jefferson was altogether unexpected and the spirit of accommodation he displayed in spite of the fact that besides playing every night he was giving two matinee performances and was simultaneously packing his lares and penates preparatory to flitting a week late to Buzzard's Bay—that spirit was characteristic. He was then (1903) an old man indeed, having been on the stage upwards of seventy years, but he entered into the new undertaking of record making with the gaiety and enthusiasm of a young man."

To that charming story I have only a few comments to add concerning the records themselves. Having heard both the discs and the cylinders electrically reproduced, I can say that the cylinders are the clearest reproductions of the great actor's voice and also have less surface noise than the discs. Rerecordings of the two Columbia records are available, I believe, on a double-faced CRS disc. Incidentally, Jefferson probably made cylinders prior to 1903, but the earliest commercial disc of his that I know of is seven-inch Berliner Rip Van Winkle The Toast. It was nationally advertised in 1898 but after fifty years, needless to say, copies of it are extremely difficult to find.

A Note on the Early Recordings of Kirsten Flagstad

When Kirsten Flagstad made her debut in this country in 1935 and achieved immediate success as a dramatic soprano, a career of more than twenty of strictly lyrical singing lay behind her. It is, of course, very unusual for a voice that remained light and lyric for so long to gain, within a period of a few years, the power and weight required by the Wagnerian roles with which Flagstad won her fame in America. Just how the Norwegian soprano was able to make the transition from lyric to dramatic singing so successfully, I do not know. In her 1936 brochure, she herself explained: "No singer with a naturally light voice should attempt Wagnerian parts. Wagner demands great power, great range, and a great volume of tone. A small voice of firm quality may grow sufficiently to cope with these roles. I know this from my own experience."

Fortunately, phonograph recordings exist which enable us to trace the development of Flagstad's voice, and with the release of IRCC disc No. 3040 we can now hear how she sounded before 1925.

In the early 1920's Flagstad recorded for minor and now defunct companies. Then, in 1923 she began recording for Norwegian HMV. Later she made electrical discs for the same company (still under the name of Kirst Flagstad-Hall) and until now these were the earliest examples of her voice to receive any circulation in the United States. Rarities for some time past, they are eagerly sought after, for they reveal exquisitely lyrical vocalism. The voice is firm, well-controlled, wide in range and pure in quality, but not as big as it became later on. Many of the records Flagstad made between 1935 and her period of war-time retirement were disappointing for one reason or another, and it is highly gratifying to learn that the great soprano has recently been recording extensively in Europe for HMV with results that are said to do justice at last to her singing as a dramatic artist.

Schipa Recordings Re-Issued

A cause for rejoicing among lovers of bel canto is Victor's recent rerelease of no less than eighteen double-faced discs by that most artistic of Italian tenors, Tito Schipa. These are renumbered editions of electrical recordings most of which were originally made before 1930, when the tenor's voice was still fresh. It is good to have them back again and I hope they will be bought in sufficient quantities to ensure the reissuance of other electrical vocal recordings of the late 1920's and early 1930's whose premature disappearance from the catalogue was such an artistic tragedy.

Some of these Schipa performances are irresistible. No matter how insignificant a song may be, he manages to infuse it with so much charm that you think it's a masterpiece. Although few Italians sing Spanish well, Schipa seems just as charming when singing in that language as he is when singing Italian—just listen to what he does with Princesita or De Falla's striking Jota. His Amapola is magical, making you forget how the song was brassily butchered on the Hit Parade some years back! And who else has sung the creole song, Ay-Ay-Ay so captivatingly? Turning to opera, I should like to mention my favorite—the coupling of the only recording of Questa o quella (Rigoletto) that I have ever been able to enjoy with a Sogno soave e casto (Don Pasquale) that is not only sheer perpection but actually genius in singing. The way he handles the opening phrase is unforgettable. That's all I shall say now, but if you think I'm raving, listen for yourself!

Death of Three Recording Artists

The deaths have recently been reported of three noted recording artists.

Vernon Dalhart, who began recording for Edison in 1916, died in a Bridgeport, Conn., hospital on September 16, aged 65. Dalhart was born in Jefferson, Texas. His real name was Marion Slaughter, but he took his stage name from two Texas towns, Vernon and Dalhart. After doing considerable "tone test" concert work for Edison, Dalhart freelanced as a recording artist for all American companies. He made phonograph history late in 1924 when he recorded "The Wreck of the Old 97" and "The Prisoner's Song" for Victor. This combination of hill-billy tunes became the biggest selling record in history, with sales going past six million copies. Dalhart recorded "The Prisoner's Song" for a dozen or more companies and is said to have made more than a million dollars in royalties from its sale alone. From that time, he dropped concert work for recording folk tunes, usually with the assistance of Carson Robison and Adelyne Hood. Between 1925 and 1931, under many different names, of hill-billy records, which gave him high rank as one of the all-time best sellers.

Eugene Cowles, once famous as the basso of the Bostonians Opera Company, died September 22 in Boston. He was 88. Cowles is best remembered as the composer of the ballad, "Forgotten," which he recorded for both Victor and Edison.

On September 17, Feruccio Giannini, 79, pioneer recording tenor and father of the Metropolitan Opera soprano, Dusolinia Giannini, died in Upper Darby, Pa. Giannini made records as early as 1896 for Berliner and may have been the first artist to sing operatic arias for the phonograph.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Another Memorable "John Bieling Day"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

Grace Spencer winds an Edison cylinder phonograph displayed by Bryant Burke, of Hempstead, at the "John Bieling Day" recording artists' party. Eugene Rose and Billy Murray are looking on.

The Vess Ossman series will be resumed next month. It has been interrupted so that I may give this account of the third annual John H. Bieling Day party, at which record collectors joined in honoring the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists who were our guests for the occasion. As had been planned, the party was given on Friday, September 10, in the Garden City Hotel at Garden City, Long Island, New York. In spite of the handicap of a rainy day, which undoubtedly kept some collectors and artists at home, everyone present seemed to feel that this first get-together on a large scale was a great success.

No doubt you recall that John Bieling, the first tenor of the famous Edison, Hayden and American male quartets, gave a party at his home in Hempstead, Long Island, on September 10, 1946, for a few of his fellow pioneer recording artists and collector friends. There was an even larger party in 1947. When it became apparent that the yearly meeting was becoming too large to go on being held in the Bieling home, some of the collectors agreed to have this year's party in the Garden City Hotel and to call it "John Bieling Day" in honor of their friend who originated the custom. Mr. Bieling died last March 30, but his friends felt that he would want the party to be held, and an arrangements committee was set up. It consisted of Bryant Burke, of Hempstead; Harry Selinger, of Oceanside; the Rev. Edward Vesper, of Queen's Village; and the writer of this article. The Long Island group handled the almost countless on-the-spot arrangements that had to be made in connection with the party, while I wrote letters of invitation to artists and sent publicity to newspapers and magazines. The New Yorkers received invaluable aid from Mr. Bieling's wife, Mrs. Meta Bieling; his son, George, and other members of the Bieling family. Anyone not directly connected with the party can have little conception of the amount of hard work that was required to make it the success it turned out to be.

Of course, there were some disappointments. The rainy weather prevented many snapshots from being taken, other than those which Al Debus, a young Glenview, Illinois, collector, made by using flash bulbs. John Young ("Harry Anthony"), the tenor of the old-time "Anthony and Harrison" duet combination, had promised to come, but the death of a nephew kept him away. His former partner, Frederick Wheeler, ("James F. Harrison") also couldn't be present. Others who had been expected but found at the last moment that they couldn't make it were Charles Harrison, Fred Van Eps, Harry Reser, Harry C. Browne and George Wilton Ballard. We hope that they can be at next year's party, which probably also will be held at Garden City, and that a good many other artists — including Wilfred Glenn, John H. Meyer, Frank Croxton, Emilio De Gogorza, Elise Stevenson, Lambert Murphy and Charles Hart — who "missed out" this time will join us in September, 1949. I was disappointed, too, that my old friend Joe Franklin, who gave the party valuable publicity on his "Antique Record Shop" program from WMCA, New York, couldn't be there.

But there was certainly reason for gratification at the number of artists who were on hand, and the considerable trouble and effort some of them went to, in order to join us. Here is the list — and I sincerely hope that I haven't overlooked anyone:

ELSIE BAKER, for many years the most popular Victor contralto.

FRANK E. BANTA, distinguished radio pianist, formerly with the Eight Famous Victor Artists, whose father, Frank P. Banta, was one of the first accompanists and orchestra conductors for the pioneer phonograph companies. The senior Banta died in 1904.

JOE BELMONT, whose recording career as a whistler goes back to 1894.

AL BERNARD, one of the greatest of blackface comedians and writer of many big song hits.

FREDERIC C. FREEMANTEL, famous concert tenor and teacher, and Mrs. Freemantel.

FRED HAGER, first man to make a commercial violin record; one of the earliest conductors of recording artists, and composer of many songs and descriptive specialties.

ARTHUR HALL, one of the most popular "free lance" recording artists of the 1920's and Mrs. Hall.

EDITH HELENA, former star of the Aborn Opera Company. This coloratura soprano with the marvelous voice range made Berliner records in 1898.

HARVEY HINDERMEYER, one of Edison's most popular tenors.

IRVING KAUFMAN, among the most prolific recording artists, who is still popular as a radio and night club entertainer.

OLIVE KLINE, formerly Elsie Baker's duet partner and for many years among the most popular Victor sopranos. She was accompanied by her husband, J. W. Houlihan.

LUCY ISABELLE MARSH, another of the top-ranking Victor sopranos with her husband, Dr. W. C. Gordon.

BOB MILLER, native Tennesseean and music publisher, who wrote and recorded many of the biggest folk tune hits, such as "Eleven Cent Cotton."

BILLY MURRAY, for almost a generation the most popular and biggest selling recording artist.

WILL OAKLAND, the great vaudeville and minstrel countertenor, who still has a wonderfully clear, sweet voice.

DICK ROBERTSON, one of the best present-day singers of popular songs and a writer of many hits.

CARSON ROBISON, former partner of the late Vernon Dalhart in recording folk tunes, and one of the outstanding writers and singers of topical and Western type songs. He was accompanied by Mrs. Robison.

EUGENE C. ROSE, the flute virutoso, was present, with Mrs. Rose. "Gene" made experimental records for Edison in 1889.

WALTER SCANLAN (better known to many collectors of old records as Walter Van Brunt), now a production manager at ABC, but from 1908 to the early 1930's one of the most popular of recording tenors.

GRACE SPENCER, (Mrs. Willard Foster Doolittle), who made cylinder records for Edison in 1897 and is believed to have been the first woman to sing for Victor. She was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Lewis M. Wilson.

AILEEN STANLEY, famous star of the Keith vaudeville circuit, who began making records in 1920 and became Billy Murray's duet partner in 1922. Her husband and business manager, Robert N. Buttenuth, and her protege, a beautiful teen-age blonde, Aileen Stanley, Jr., came with her.

REINALD WERRENRATH, distinguished concert baritone and teacher, who formerly sang with the Metropolitan Opera. Mr. and Mrs. Werrenrath made a long and fatiguing drive from their summer home at Ellenburg Depot, N. Y., and arrived at the party after having had almost no time to rest. I hope that the appreciation of the collectors was sufficient to reward them and Mr. and Mrs. Houlihan, who had a similar long drive from their summer quarters on Lake George.

In addition to the artists, Mrs. Byron G. Harlan, widow of the famous comedian, honored us with her presence, and Harry Hunting, accompanied by Mrs. Hunting, was on hand. Harry's father, the late Russell Hunting, was one of the first recording artists, and his early cylinders of "Casey" monologues were among the biggest sellers of their day. Russell Hunting was also one of the foremost recording experts and frequently had his son's assistant in his work. Harry showed me what is probably the oldest record catalog in existence — one which had belonged to his father — as well as much other material which I wish I could have spent hours in studying. But I was kept so busy, giving information to newspaper people and handling publicity, that I didn't have a chance to talk with anyone as much as I would have liked. Fred Hager, too, showed me a collection of catalogs that made my mouth water.

Also among those present were the recording manager of MGM records, Frank Walker, and Mrs. Walker, who came with Mr. and Mrs. Carson Robison and three veterans of the Thomas A. Edison organization — Bill Hays, Fred Rabenstein and Andy Weber. Mrs. Bieling, of course, was with us, as were John Bieling's several sons and daughters, a number of grandchildren, and other members of the Bieling family.

On the morning of that historic September 10, Bryant Burke, Harry Selinger and I reached the hotel shortly after 9 o'clock. For the first few minutes nothing much happened, but then the collectors and artists began arriving in such numbers that we were kept busy trying to meet them all. Bryant and I had planned to have breakfast in the hotel, but once the excitement was under way there wasn't a chance of that.

I believe the first collector to report was Charlie Hodgdon, who, with his wife, Mary, came from Newburyport, Mass. Several others appeared soon afterward. I think Mrs. Doolittle was the first artist I met. Madame Helena came a few minutes later. She was accompanied by her friend, Mrs. Grace Tully, who learned of the party through Danton Walker's column in the New York Daily News and wrote to me for information. Mrs. Tully gave me some home recordings of Madame Helena's voice, and they reveal her to be still an accomplished singer, as well as a woman of charming personality. But that praise about having a charming personality could be extended to all the artists. It would be hard to find their equal among any other group of celebrities for cordiality and genuine, unaffected friendship. For instance, Frank Banta, Al Bernard and Harvey Hindermeyer were all thoughtful enough to bring me photographs of themselves.

One amusing incident occurred when Elsie Baker pretended not to recognize Reinald Werrenrath, and jokingly inquired: "You're not the man who was coming all the way from California to meet me, are you?" Whereupon, Dale Miller, who had driven from Long Beach, California, for the party, and had all sorts of trouble on the way, overheard remark and spoke up. "No," he said, "I'm the man from California." And Dr. Werrenrath exclaimed, "A perfect cue!"

Eventually, the Rev. Mr. Vesper took the stage as master of ceremonies and gave a brief explanation of the origin of John Bieling Day.

He then said that records made by the guest artists would next be played, in approximately chronological order, based on the years in which the performers first recorded. That gave Eugene Rose the honor of leading off, with an excellently recorded flute solo. Joe Belmont was next with a whistling specialty, and, after it had been played, Joe came forward and gave an interesting talk on his early recording experiences. Fred Hager, Billy Murray, Grace Spencer, Edith Helena, Reinald Werrenrath and Harvey Hindermeyer were also heard from in recorded form, before the announcement was made that luncheon was ready. Since the party was running behind schedule, the record playing wasn't resumed after the meal. My own opinion is that it would be better to drop the recorded part of the program in future years. There isn't time enough, as we learned, to include something by each artist, and I believe that it would be better to get together and talk about our common interests than to spend part of the time listening to records.

During luncheon, Ed Vesper told me that he was tired and asked if I would take over as master of ceremonies after we had eaten. I agreed, but before I could go into action, I was told that James Thrasher, a reporter for the NEA Feature Service, wanted to see me. I had to go talk with Mr. Thrasher, who wrote a feature story that was sent to 750 newspapers, and Ed then pulled a stroke of genius. He asked Irving Kaufman to do the M. C.'ing job, and Irving, with his accustomed ability, obliged. And that brilliant humorist was a hundred times more effective than I could possibly have been. He seated himself at the piano and gave us a performance typical of those he does in the New York night club at which he and his wife, Belle, star. I'm sure that no one who was there can forget Irving's side-splitting rendition of "Mo, the Schmo" or his impersonation of Frank Sinatra.

Irving also called on his fellow artists, and out of pure friendship they gave us a performance that in itself was worth far more than the $5.50 registration fee which the collectors had paid, to meet the expense of engaging the hotel's Georgian room and serving the meal. I'm sure all of us deeply appreciated the opportunity of being present at such a remarkable good will offering. Frank Banta, one of the most congenial, likable fellows I've ever met (and I'd been wanting to meet him for many years) not only gave us some piano solos but was untiring in accompanying the singers. I can't list all the details of the program, because I was constantly being called out of the room and probably saw less of it than almost anyone else, but Al Bernard gave a couple of blackface numbers, including his Edison Diamond Disc classic, "My Dawg." Arthur Hall, who is as unaffected friendly and agreeable as anybody I know, chose a number that couldn't have been any more appropriate — Ernest R. Ball's beautiful ballad, "Here's Love and Success to You." Carson Robison sent the crowd into hysterics with his rendition of his own composition, which is a best selling MGM record, "Life Gets Teejus, Don't It?" He gave me an autographed copy of the disc. Aileen Stanley sang "Gotta Get a Girl" with the freshness and youthful vocal quality of a girl of 20, and Aileen, Jr., who has been trained to sing in authentic Aileen Stanley manner, captivated us with her rendition of several classic Aileen successes, including "Let It Rain — I'll Be in Virginia in the Morning." Irving asked Billy Murray to join Aileen in one of their old-time duets, but "The Boss," who was having trouble with low blood pressure and wasn't feeling up to par, explained that, under doctor's orders, he was "in drydock," and couldn't sing. But he did walk up to the platform for a reunion with Aileen. Many of those present considered it to be the high spot of the party when Aileen threw her arms around Billy and kissed him. I had to miss it. I had just been called out of the room to talk with somebody! But Al Debus took a flash exposure of the preliminary stage of the embrace, and has sent me a print of it. Bob-Buttenuth played fine piano accompaniments for both Aileens.

It was unfortunate that some of the artists had to leave early. Doctor Freemantel, whose snow-white hair and white mustache won him many nominations for being the most distinguished looking man at the party, explained that he and Mrs. Freemantel were obliged to return to their school of vocal instruction in New York. I wish he could have stayed long enough to sing for us. Walter Scanlan also had to hurry back to his ABC job immediately after lunch. We were also disappointed that Will Oakland and Dick Robertson couldn't stay for the entire program, because we had hoped to hear them sing.

One of the outstanding events of the afternoon was a long and amusing talk by Reinald Werrenrath on various musical subjects. He reminisced about his friendship with John Bieling and his associations with the Hayden Quartet. He also paid his not too respectful respects to what he called the "lousy" present-day popular songs and the even worse "artists" who make moaning, gargling noises when they allegedly sing them.

And one of the most gratifying features of the day was the hit made by my friend Willie DuPree, who works with me at radio station WSLS, in Roanoke, Virginia, when he isn't attending Howard University. Willie is an 18-year-old Negro boy whose beautiful tenor voice has won him wide popularity in Southwest Virginia. I believed that if he went to New York and sang for the artists attending the party, he might receive some encouragment and good advice. And he did. Willie sang the familiar ballad, "Homing," and acquitted himself well, though he told me afterwards that he was almost overcome by the honor of being accompanied by Frank Banta. "Mr. Banta played so brilliantly," he remarked, "that I felt that I ought to stand there and listen to him, instead of trying to sing." He was also naturally a bit self-conscious about being heard after so many famous artists entertained. Reinald Werrenrath, who had been about to leave, stayed especially to hear the young fellow sing. The former Metropolitan Opera star told Willie that he has a naturally sweet voice and a true feeling for singing and, with proper training, should go far as a concert artist. Several other artists also gave him similar encouragement and advice, as did the editor of the Ameri-Record Guide, Peter Hugh Reed. Incidentally, Willie had a great time when the Rev. Mr. Vesper and the "Woodymay Wizards,' John L. Norton, senior and junior, took him with them to West Orange, New Jersey, for a visit to the Edison laboratory. Being thoroughly tired out, I decided to skip my scheduled visit to Edison.

The party had broken up late in the afternoon and I was just about to leave the Garden City Hotel when I was told that I was wanted on the phone. To my surprise, the person calling me was Taylor Grant, the well-known newscaster for the American Broadcasting Company. Taylor had learned of the party from Walter Scanlan, and wanted to know if I would talk about it on a network television program the following Saturday night. I agreed, and Dale Miller, George Bieling and I drove to Radio City the next afternoon, taking with us an Edison Standard cylinder phonograph which its owner, Bryant Burke, had displayed at the party. I played Billy Murray's 1906 record of "You're a Grand Old Rag" and was interviewed by Mr. Grant about the party. So my face was seen by television from Boston to Richmond.

I only hope that it didn't look as exhausted as the rest of me felt. I was already tired before I left Virginia, and by the time I returned home that I set a new record for myself by sleeping 25½ hours at a stretch. But it was a great vacation trip and a great party — and I'm sure that we'll have an even bigger and better meeting in September, 1949!

TREASURE CHEST
PART VI

The Sad, Sad Iron

Thomas Edison, to be sure, was a great benefactor of mankind, but what old-time housewife will deny that he was the culprit responsible for shoving into obscurity a utility as trusty and thorough as grandma's straw broom; that is the sad iron.

In the era of twenty or so years ago, it was a fascinating pastime on a cold winter's day to watch my mother line up four duck-like flat irons on a scoured coal stove, shake up the fire, and proceed to "do up" the family laundry. The irons required the utmost in good judgment and caution, for there were no gadgets to dictate the amount of heat to be used for the various fabrics. Mother relied wholly on the "spit and finger" test to determine whether an iron was hot or cool enough for the garment at hand.

We marveled at her genius as her arm skimmed gracefully across the ironing board and transformed our soggy, faded apparel into shiny, starched "robes of royalty" — or so we thought. Everyone who walked into our home on ironing day exclaimed over mother's beautiful work. Indeed, papa called her an artist and said the clothes she ironed were "masterpieces." And why shouldn't he? The spotless stiff-collared white shirts he wore were the envy of all his cronies, and as for us, we beamed with pride each day as we showed off our faultlessly pressed pinafores, frilled to a crisp perfection.

It was many a year after the advent of the electric iron before mother succumbed to its enticements, and then only after a salesman had surveyed our large family through a crack in the door and quickly jammed his foot inside. Being the best of his kind, he dazzled mother with the miracles of the gadget and before she knew it, she was in possession of a new electric iron, with only a fifty-cents deposit and fifty cents a month to pay for one year.

Today there is a mangle at our house, and no one compliments mother any more as this "ogre" snatches up each garment and flattens it with its jaws. No graceful strokes are required to master a garment, for this robot governs all. Ironing is no longer an art, is seems, but only a mechanized procedure.

The four sad irons have retired to a dark closet in our house. However, there are times when they emerge temporarily. Twice they served the immediate needs of newly married sisters. Time and again they were used as extra nut-crackers on holidays, and once even to crack coconuts.

We often stumble over the sad irons and stub our toes, but we are sentimental about them and the family would never dream of parting with them. Perhaps some day one of us will have an Early American home. In that event the four sad irons shall be carefully silvered and presented to the lucky one, to be used as door-stops.

GLIDDEN TOURISTS

water hazards difficult in those days even as today.

The ladies bathing suits were much admired. The concensus of opinion seemed to be that they were indeed meant for "bathing" and not for "swimming!" The suits worn by the men were not as constricting—but the broad stripes and below-the-knee trousers of 1908 are a far cry from the trunks of 1948. The major problems with the men, however, was coping with a wet six-inch moustache which just wouldn't look attractive when it got wet!

William J. Clothier, well-known Philadelphia sportsman and philanthropist furnished tennis racquets with which he had won practically every major tournament during the 1905-1910 years.

One of the high spots was the square dance the night of October 11th with the great majority of the men and women attending in costume. Mrs. Richard Eichelberger of Bedford led the contingent of townspeople who joined with the tourists in dancing to the old fashioned music with a prominent local citizen calling out the numbers. During one of the intermissions a number of prizes donated by the Schrader Valve Company were presented by President Duryea and Manager Hoke. The major award for the Gliddener whose car most nearly approximated the original Glidden Tour car of 1908 was won by William Fleming of Wycombe, Pennsylvania, with his 1903 Cadillac. Additional Schrader awards for costumes and cars were won by the following:

Mr. and Mrs. William C. Spear, Manchester, New Hampshire, 1910 Simplex Touring; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel E. Baily, Cynwyd, Pennsylvania, 1909 Pierce-Arrow; Dr. J. R. Moody, Newport, R. I., 1910 Cadillac; Henry Heinsohn, Jr., Pleasantville, N. J., 1911 Chalmers.

A parade of 50 cars highlighted the second day of the meeting. Thousands of people lined the curbs as the steamers and gasoline buggies slowly drove along the tree shaded streets of the historic town. The High School band led the way, and a Red Cross car, Firestone car, and Tidewater Associated Oil car brought up the rear to take care of (a) accidents, (b) punctures, and (c) gasoline and, water. All this was in keeping with tradition—for in 1908 a local band led the parade and a Red Cross car and Firestone tire car followed the whole route of the Glidden Tour. The gasoline car was a modern courtesy—forty years ago it was hauled 8 miles over the mountain and sold for 25 cents a gallon.

The American Automobile Association in 1908 posted signs all over Bedford warning the inhabitants to keep their "pets, children and live stock" attended during the parade—and again in 1948 the AAA posted similar placards from copies of the original editions.

Colonel Augustus Post, a pioneer in the field of aviation and winner of the Gordon Bennett balloon race in 1906, was one of the participants in 1908—and also in this event greeted old friends attending.

Note the age of some of the early automobile which made the "grueling" trip from Philadelphia to Bedford Springs.

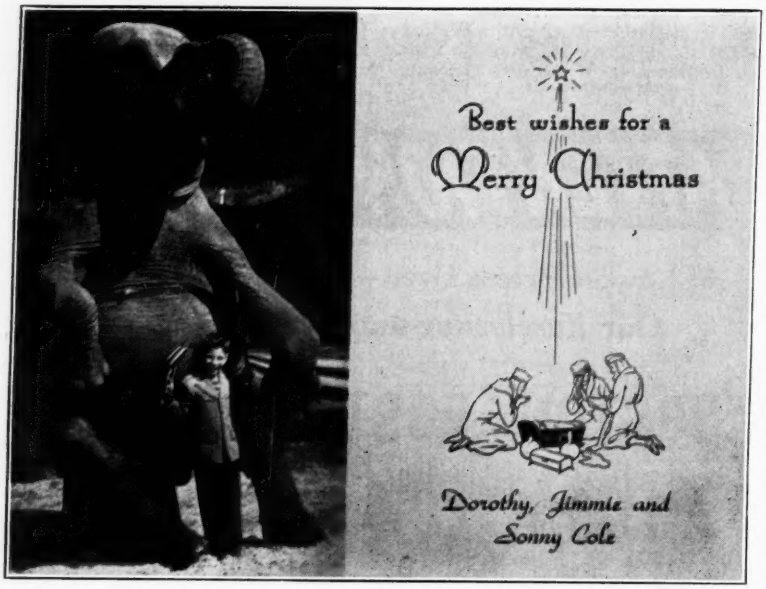
THE CIRCUS AND CHRISTMAS

By A. MORTON SMITH



CHRISTMAS GREETING card sent to their friends by Mr. and Mrs. James M. Cole. owners of James M. Cole Circus, of Penn Yan, New York.

There has always seemed to be a close kinship between the circus and the American way of celebrating Christmas.

Each has its tinsel and glitter, its merry hustle and bustle, its mythical characters, its universal appeal. And the circus — like Christmas — comes but once a year, is here today and gone tomorrow, leaving pleasant memories for all who have enjoyed its pageantry.

This kinship of which we speak, was pointed up by Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus, in the production for its 1948 season, of an elaborate pageant entitled "Twas the Night Before Christmas."

It was a spectacular presentation, which presented several hundred participants in a panoramic picture of a child's paradise — toys and beloved story book characters, come to life, and dancing merrily around the hippodrome track, as Christmas bells rang out from the familiar bell wagon which has been a perennial Ringling circus feature since 1892, while Santa Claus made his appearance, driving his team of eight simulated reindeer.

Favorite Yuletide music heightened the presentation and the whole left a profound impression upon the millions of persons who saw the show during the season.

It was not, however, the first use of old St. Nick in a circus pageant. Back in 1928, the Robbins Brothers Circus conceived and presented a tournament called "Santa Claus in Fairyland," which had the merry old gentleman driving reindeer to a sleigh, while fairy story characters streamed forth in the line of march.

The circus has inspired a great host of gift items and Christmas toys. Circus animals, particularly elephants, giraffes, seals and monkeys have been fashioned into mechanical toys, ornaments, book ends, paper weights, salt and peppers, table lamps, and many other items.

Animated acrobats and aerialists, miniature cage wagons, circus phonograph records, story and coloring books, puzzles, games all stemming from the circus, are to be found in Christmas gift stores while circus subjects have also been used extensively in Christmas card designs and jingles.

Similarly, the association of the circus with Christmas has provided employment of a great many circus people during the pre-Christmas season, when circuses are in wraps at winter quarters and many of these performers would otherwise be unemployed until Spring rolls around again.

To mark the opening of the Christmas shopping season, hundreds of cities and towns throughout the country stage annual Santa Claus parades of varying features, but in many of them, professional units are employed.

In these units are many circus people and much circus equipment. Professional clowns take part and provide scores of grotesque big heads which are used in clown walkaround numbers in the arena. Animals from circus winter quarters are also used extensively in these parades, particularly elephants, camels and Shetland pones. Circus wardrobe is also provided for the characters in the parade, who ride on circus floats and tableau wagons.

Likewise, the larger department stores of the metropolitan centers arrange entertainment features in their toy departments for the youngsters. These include professional clowns, trained animals, magicians, jugglers, marionettes, and other features, and most of these attractions are from the principal circuses of the land.

Several clowns of my acquaintance annually are employed by the same department stores during the pre-Christmas season and I know some who have been retained by the same stores for from 10 to 15 years and have wide acquaintanceships in the respective cities due to their annual visits.

All of these activities provide the ardent circusiana collectors with additional material for their collections. There are collectors for example, who find it particularly interesting to collect all of the various types of toy circuses which have been put on the market through the years.

Others have collections of the various types of toy circus wagons that have been built by toy makers. I know some collectors who have a zest for obtaining as many different types of items which are replicas of circus menagerie animals as are to be found in the toy and gift shops. Some do not overlook any of the juvenile circus story and coloring books to be had.

And the appearance of circus performers and equipment in Santa

BELLS OF HISTORY

By GLADYS JORDAN

The sweet-toned bells ring out their message on a Sunday morning, or, softly toll the twilight hour, and people pause to listen to what Victor Hugo so aptly termed, "the opera of the steeples."

But long before there were steeples or even churches, bells played an important part in human history. In far away India savage tribes brought strange, bell-like music from resonant hollow tubes; usually made from tin or copper. These bells were held sacred by the natives.

Centuries before Christ, in the ancient Chinese temples, lotus-shaped bells called the people to worship, or tolled a mournful knell for departed souls. Also, there were bell-towers in many parts of China. Usually these bells were without a clapper and were struck with a heavy wooden hammer instead of being rung.

The "Great Bell," of China, cast in 1420, is in the Big Bell Temple near Peking. It is 14 feet high and is covered with Chinese characters. Many a strange legend is told of these ancient bells. It is said that Yu the Great introduced the so-called, "Bells of Justice," into China, during his reign. Outside his palace gate was a great bell, and anyone who believed himself unjustly treated had only to strike this bell and be at once admitted to a hearing before the Governor himself.

The Japanese learned of the art of bell-making from the Chinese, and they have made some of the most beautiful bells in the world. The Big Bell of Chion-in at Kioto, is one of the most famous. And the second largest bell in the world is in Japan. It was cast in 1902 and was made from an old Buddhist temple. It is 26 feet high and weighs more than 150 tons.

Most Chinese bells are made with a hole in the top but on the top of almost every Japanese bell is a dragon. Often a medallion is cast in the side of the bell at the exact spot where it is to be struck, instead of being rung. Japanese pirates often brought, as trophies, bells from Korea to the temples of Kyushu. Many of the ancient bells were of bronze and like the bells of China have queer legends attached to them. They were greatly revered by the people.

Bells have been discovered in ancient Egyptian tombs and the early Hindus were great users of bells. Small bells were often used as ornaments on ceremonial robes and dancing girls had little golden bells on their feet, the soft music of which blended perfectly with their silvery voices. Kings often had their robes adorned with golden bells and bells were hung at the gates of the Roman temples.

In the fifth century bell towers were built for the basilicas of Ravenna and in the sixth century they were built for Irish monasteries. Many of the early bells were dedicated before they were hung and a most solemn service was held over them. They were supposed to summon the faithful to service and to drive away evil spirits.

Bells were first used for churches at Nola, near Naples. The idea is supposed to have originated with Bishop Paulinus, of Nola, in the town of Campania. He died in 431. Some writers claim that the word, "bell" is formed from the Latin name, Campanula, which, in turn, is formed from two words, Campania and Nola. All do not agree as to the origin of the word 'bell'.

In the National Museum of Ireland, in Dublin, is the famous Saint Patrick's Bell. It is kept in a shrine, or case, and bears an inscription in Irish. It is supposed to have been made between 1091 and 1105. It is of bronze and silver with gold filigree work on it.

The largest bell in the world is the, "Great Bell of Moscow. It is 60 feet in circumstance and weighs 198 tons. It was cast in 1653. The third largest bell in the world is the "Great Bell of Mandalay. It took time and skill and many men to complete the work on these great bells and it took many men to ring the early bells. The huge logs used to strike them needed many hands to give driving force enough to bring out the full, deep tones of the bell.

Probably bells were not in great use among the Christian race before the seventh century. Then, gradually, they were introduced into churches. Following this period, bell-towers became popular. And these bells were definitely named with public ceremony. Often they were the gift of the King or Archbishop.

In England, "Great Paul," at Saint Paul's Cathedral, London, is the largest. It weighs over 16 tons. The inscription was taken from First Corinthians, ninth chapter and sixteenth verse and translated, reads, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel."

The second largest bell in England is at Westminster. It is called "Big Ben," and many of us have heard its musical notes over the radio, if not nearer at hand.

Gradually the great universities and colleges had bells of their own. "Great George," of Bristol University, is one of the largest. A specially designed electrical contrivance strikes the hour of this famous bell. Lincoln Cathedral and Gatehouse Tower each have a "Great Tom" bell. It was in 1652 that Miles Graye cast a bell that has been called his masterpiece. Because of its beautifully clear notes it has been named, "The Matchless Tenor." The art of bell-ringing at that time was a fine art and only a few men were trained so as to get the full quality from these matchless bells.

After many years, bells came to America. The justly famous, "Liberty Bell," was originally cast in England. It was cracked, re-cast at Philadelphia, cracked again and again re-cast in 1753. It can now be seen and studied by all who visit the State House in Philadelphia.

One of the largest carillions in the world is in New York City. It was a gift of John D. Rockfeller, Jr., in memory of his mother. It consists of 53 bells and is in the Park Avenue Baptist church. The new Parliament Building at Ottawa, Canada, has one very like it.

Most monasteries have bells tolling at certain hours and their message is well understood by the inmates. Also, there is the Curfew bell, "that tolls the knell of parting day," and the Ave Bell that tells the people to repeat their three Aves, or prayers, at even-time.

Ships at sea depend upon bells to sound the passing hours and half hours. Three bells strikes one at noon-time, twice at twelve-thirty and so on until four P. M. when eight bells are sounded.

At Christmas time bells are greatly used, but never in America have bells been as extensively used or with the real ceremony given them in ancient times. However, here in America bells are being collected, studied and kept along with other treasures as never before. Beautiful bells of every size, color, material, and from every nation where bells are made. I think old bells have never been more beautifully described than by the poet, Longfellow, after he had listened to the belfry chimes of Burgess Cathedral.

"Then most musical and solemn, bringing back the olden times,
With their strange, unearthly changes, rang the melancholy chimes.
Like the psalms from some old cloister,
when the sun sings in the choir.
And the great bell tolled among them,
like the chanting of a friar.
Visions of the days departed,
shadowy phantoms filled my brain:
They who live in history only seemed to walk the earth again."

Fortune Not Necessary to Collect Silver

From the foregoing it might be suspected by the uninitiated that collecting silver was a rich man's hobby. That is far from the truth. Many fine old pieces can be had for a reasonally small sum, and fortunately silver bought wisely is usually a good investment. There are the utility items such as knives, forks and spoons that are within the purse reach of practically every person these days. They can be bought with discrimination and thus serve generation after generation. Trays, sugars, creamers, candlesticks, can all be procured for the enhancement of Souvenir spoons can be gathered into a sizeable group without a considerable outlay of cash. A most unusual specimen that your reporter noted recently was one from the Philippine Islands with the handle in the form of an open banana. Another specimen in this collection is of Florentine origin and bears the crest of one of the former ruling houses of Italy on its handle. Spoons in this collection remind us of the changing times. One from Oberammergau in the Bavarian Alps, bears a scene of the Passion Play. Undoubtedly this item will be historical in time.

For Kings and Commoner

Silver has been favored by rulers and commoner alike. One of the most beautiful pieces of silver said to ever have been made was a tureen presented by the City of Paris to Napoleon on his coronation day, 1804.

SILVER FORUM

Shakespeare and the Posset

In the October "HOBBIES", page 54, article "Notes on Old Silver," the last item is in error" * * * is referred to in the Merry Wives of Windsor by Shakespeare, who causes Macbeth to say:

'I have drugged their possets,
That death and Nature do control about them,
Whether they live or die.' "

In Act II, scene 2 Macbeth does say this in the play of Macbeth, but In the "Merry Wives of Windsor", Act I, scene 4, Quickly says to Rugby,

"Go; and we'll have a posset for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea coal fire."

It may be that the printer omitted a line, thus confusing Shakespeare's two plays.

A relative subscribed to HOBBIES and I enjoy reading it very much, learning things I did not know.

Sun-dial Mottoes

There are so many phases to the collecting of data relating to time and timepieces that practically all tastes can be satisfied. Those who care not for the mechanical aspects of clock collecting, might well turn to such an interesting subject as sun-dials. A few years ago a Mrs. Gatty wrote a book on sun-dials and she uncovered some interesting mottoes engraved and carved on these old timepieces. If you have enjoyed this interesting pastime of collecting the mottoes of advise and admonition here are a few others to add to your list, translated from the Latin:

"Thou growest old in beholding."
"The style is iron; but time is gold."
"Seize the present moment, the hour of eve is nigh."
"We have little time, but we waste much."

The sun-dials with which most of us are familiar were stationary. However, history shows that there were portable sun-dials in use in early measurements of time. Perhaps some reader of this department has come across accounts of these in his or her search into timepiece history. The portable sun-dial served the same purpose as the watch, only it was much more cumbersome.

Burning Candles

King Alfred depended upon a burning-candle of his own invention to measure time. It is related that he used a candle 12 inches long, divided by marks into twelve sections. Each candle served four hours, and six candles were required to record the full day of 24 hours.

Early English Clock

One of the earliest clocks made in England is one said to have been constructed by Peter Lightfoot, about 1335, when he was resident monk at Glastonbury Abbey. The clock was installed in the abbey of the church, but was removed when Henry VIII came into power. This clock had a 6 ft., 6 in. dial. A gilt star or sun traversed the dial and indicated the hour.

Clock of Japan

A few years ago J. Drummond Robertson of England wrote a book on "The Evolution of Clockwork," and illustrated with specimens from his collection, including an outstanding group which he had procured in Japan.

In picturing and describing the Japanese clocks in his collection he gave a short historical survey on how the first clocks in Japan found their way to Portuguese missionaries and the Dutch traders. Gifts were made to the Emperor and from his court the general public was gradually introduced to mechanical time-keeping devices. It did not take the handy Japanese tradesman long to copy the specimens and adapt them to the general use of his countrymen. Quite frequently old Japanese prints are found that have a clock in the background.

oOo

Odd Shapes

The makers of watches often used ingenuinity and individuality in the making of cases. The noted clock collector, Professor Willis I. Milham, whose book a few years ago "Time and Timekeepers," is still one of the best reference books on the subject, describes some unusual watches. One in the form of a tulip was made by Rugend of Auch and dates from just after 1600. Another interesting specimen in the shape of a pear is the work of Conrad Kreizer of Strassbourg, about 1500. Kreizer also made a specimen in the form of an octagon and one in the form of a cross.

Time

Shun such as lounge through afternoons and eves,
And on thy dial write "Beware of thieves!"
Felon of minutes, never taught to feel
The worth of treasures which tiny fingers steal,
Pick my left pocket of the silver dime,
But spare the right — it holds my golden time!

"Pinkie"

Out of reach of the pocketbook of the average collector, some of the paintings in the Huntington collection, nevertheless can be enjoyed by all collectors. A most appealing subject in this vast collection is "Pinkie" — Sarah Moulton-Barrett, by Sir Thomas Lawrence. This portrait was executed when the little girl was eleven and the artist but 26. Youth and vivacity are registered. The picture shows the young girl poised as for a dance step. Her filmy dress is caught in a breeze. Some say that Lawrence never excelled this canvas. In 1795, the canvas was exhibited at the Royal Academy in London. This was the last portrait ever purchased by Mr. Huntington. It was in 1927 that he bought it from Sir Joseph Duveen, who bought it at auction in London for the sum of $375,000.

Howard Pyle

One of the best interpreters of colonial style in America was Howard Pyle, who did work with both the brush and the pen. Pyle, because of his facile hand was in great demand for illustrating books and Harper and Brothers, published many books with his illustrations.

An especially good illustration by Pyle is one "A Quaker Exhorter in New England," which was originally published in "Harper's, Magazine", 1883. It pictured the colonial church, a group of church towers and a street scene of town crier and ducks in the foreground.

Pyle numbered such friends as George Inness, Junior, the landscape painter; Edwin Austin Abbey, whose murals are well known all over the world; Joseph Pennell, etcher; John LaFarge, and others.

"I have lived so long," he wrote once, "In our American past that it is like a certain part of my life. My imagination dwells in it and at times when I sit in my studio at work I forget the present and see the characters and things of these old days moving about me."

Museum Doll Family
(See Cover)

The cover of this issue represents a few of the dolls in the collection presented to the Museum of Hobbies, St. Augustine, Fla., by Mrs. Floyd H. Smith of Coral Gables, Fla.

This collection of dolls began when Barbara, the 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Smith was two. She showed such an unusual interest in dolls and their wardrobes that her mother who'd been rather repressing her own vivid interest in dolls decided to "let go."

Today Barbara has collected about 600 dolls, many of them exquisitely and historically costumed by her mother, and most of the collection is now in St. Augustine, Fla., at the Museum of Hobbies where suitable display cases are being arranged for them.

In getting the collection together Mrs. Smith and Barbara have set up a few rules of order that they follow. For instance:

"We never grab a doll who doesn't appeal to us, just to keep some other collector from acquiring it," Mrs. Smith said. "And we often buy some inexpensive little modern item because we fall in love with it—never minding the fact that several million of that brand may have been manufactured."

The oldest dolls in the collection are the wax dolls from the early 1800's — the ones that Godey's Ladies' Book, in 1865, recommended as "unsuitable for the nursery." Godey's suggested that dolls with composition heads, then just coming out, be substituted.

Mrs. Smith finds that both wax and composition dolls are hard to keep fit in this climate, because the heat of summer tends to crack them.

The collection contains such character dolls as George and Martha Washington, Anne Boleyn, the Gibson Girl, the Bustle Girl, and the Tudor doll — all of which Mrs. Smith has dressed historically, down to the last detail, in the most exquisite of costumes.

She keeps drawers of materials on hand for this work, and any leisure moment may find her at it.

One of the prize items of the collection is a wax doll which came to Mrs. Smith from the heirs of John Singer Sargent. Its original little mistress died 81 years ago, when she was seven years old.

Mrs. Smith says she doesn't guess about the ages of any of the dolls in her collection; she finds out what they are, literally, and doesn't try to add a year to any of them! As for dolls of today's manufacture Mrs. Smith especially likes the Alexander dolls.

AT LAST!

After many months of searching, we finally have located a tool manufacturer that will make for us a special pair of pliers that will make the job of setting eyes in composition heads with the expansion type bridge a very simple operation. Some time ago we did locate a machine for this job but it was too elaborate and sold for $75, which of course was too expensive for the average doll hospital. We made a sample tool and finally located a maker. We are sure that every doll hospital will be more than pleased with this tool.

DOLLS FROM FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mrs. A. R. McLaughlin of South Carolina is more fortunate than most doll collectors. Her daughter, Lois Dean, started the collection in 1931. Then an educational missionary in India, she sent her mother a doll typical of the natives of each country she visited.

"All my dolls are made in the countries they represent and to me they are priceless," Mrs. McLaughlin states.

Her most prized doll is Kate O'-Bear, named for a little girl who lived in South Carolina during the War Between the States.

When Union General Wiliam T. Sherman marched through South Carolina to the sea, Kate buried the doll in a garden with her family silver. She dug it up after the war was over.

Gram and Gramp portray Nova Scotia mountaineers. Gram's shawl is tied securely under her chin, her gray hair is neatly balled at the back of her head, and beneath her dress are red flannels.

Another pair of dolls were made in New Orleans and dressed in clothes made from costumes of a Mardi Gras king and queen.

Also depicted in miniature are Franklin D. Roosevelt, Queen Mary, Madame Chiang, Robert E. Lee, a Kentucky colonel, George Washington, Naughty Marietta and Scarlett O'Hara.

DOLLS AS CHRISTMAS HERALDS

By LAURA VIRGINIA HALE

Let your dolls say Merry Christmas for you! Cards which reflect ones special interests or hobbies not only have the personal touch so effective in a greeting card, but also add to the receiver's pleasure. And what could be more consonant as a Christmas card motif than dolls — enchanting obligatos to our fondest memories of childhood Christmases, "so good to be believed in once, so good to be remembered when outgrown".

So photograph a single beauty or a comely group from your doll collection, and feature them on your Christmas cards. I have been using this idea for some time, and the enthusiastic reception the cards get from my friends is gilded compensation for the extra trouble involved. It is a delightful way to show off your "children".

Each fall I look over my dolls and decide which is to have a card career next. One year it was Lila Beth, a beautiful bisque doll who has been in our family for many years. As she is my special "pride and joy", I had her professionally costumed. Replete in all the glory of her gleaming satin and velvet, and posed before a large mirror so as to dsplay her elegance from all sides, Lila Beth went forth as the shining herald of my Christmas greetings.

Sometimes I choose a group of dolls — one year a mother-daughter arrangement, another time an assemblage showing the different types and periods represented in my collection, and again an informal gathering around an antique doll piano. There are many intriguing possibilities for such doll tableaux, representing, for instance, some Christmas scene or subject, but it is not always

Button News From Here and There

Noted — a winter coat of this season with buttons looking like shooting stars. The wearer said that the clerk who sold her the coat said she called them the "atom bomb" buttons. If it is true that the button designers are going in for pictorial representations of our age, we may see more buttons of the modern age that will be collectors' items tomorrow.

oOo

Talked with a button collector a few days ago who deplored the lack of buttons depicting American history. This particular party being interested in the theatre would like to run across specimens depicting some of our well-known artists of yesteryear. She spoke in particular of one of our favorites of history — Lotta Crabtree, who was born in New York in 1848 of English parents. Lotta is also of interest because she was called the first girl of the Golden West. Her mother took her to California when she was five in pursuit of the rainbow-chasing father, and before Lotta was ten she became the family breadwinner, because of her abilities at mimicry, her singing and dancing ability.

Some years ago Constance Rourke wrote a book about Lotta which helped to perpetuate the charms and abilities of this actress. "Troupers of the Gold Coast, or the Rise of Lotta Crabtree" the book was called. It features particularly Lotta's western days, but also speaks of the time when her mother brought her back to the East at the age of 17. So much for that part of the little girl's history. It is interesting to note that when she died in Boston in 1914, she left a fortune of $14,000,000 to charity, yet she was almost forgotten by the American people who had once adored her.

Yes, it is easy to see why some collectors showing a leaning toward portrait buttons of theatrical persons would like more specimens for their collections.

oOo

The newspaper writers commented on the dearth of campaign buttons worn for the recent contest that is now a part of history. Perhaps, the lack of buttons will enhance their value in years to come.

oOo

The clock collectors want more buttons depicting in some way their hobby, if we may judge by a recent letter to this department. Collectors of fans, hands, paintings are well supplied with buttons representing their hobby, but it does seem that the folks interested in timepieces have been overlooked by the button designers.

oOo

A picture sent to this department some years ago by Mary Carmany of Ohio, aroused your correspondent's interest in the subject of lighting devices on buttons. But this also is a field that came in for too little attention by the designers. Mrs. Carmany, for want of a better name for the button in question, called it "Paul Revere's Lantern," and it seemed a most appropriate name for the clearly defined lantern shown on the specimen.

The designer who made the white satin dress for my niece's recent wedding had a flair for sentiment judging by the buttons she chose for the front of the gown. They were heart-shaped pearls.

oOo

Patty Parrish of Michigan, who with Mr. Parrish attended the Chicago Antiques Exposition and Hobby Fair held in October, brought along some of her button trays for the enjoyment of her button friends. Mrs. Parrish has a most artistic way of mounting some of her specimens. For instance her buttons bearing the design of a rose are mounted in frames having a rose design drawn in and colored. The daisy buttons and other flower types were similarly mounted, and the creation was most effective. Unfortunately, not many collectors have the ability for sketching and painting that Mrs. Parrish has.

oOo

Our next issue of this department will feature a collection of Kate Greenaway buttons belonging to Mrs. Agnes Sasscier of Chicago. This is a subject that appeals to many and Mrs. Sasscier, one of the most avid of Greenaway devotees, has handled the subject in a capable and interesting manner.

Coat of Arms Buttons

By JOHN SHAW

Arms of Glasgow

Glasgow, among British cities second only to London, is the commercial and manufacturing capital of Scotland. The name Glasgow did not appear until the twelfth century, and seems to be derived from the Celtic word cleshu from which came gleshu (Glas "green", and ghu "beloved". "The dear green spot.") The name was first given to the village which sprang up on the Molindar Burn, around the Chapel of the Holy Kentigern, the Patron Saint of Glasgow, on the spot now occupied by the cathedral. The memory of St. Kentigern and some of his wonderful deeds is perpetuated in the city Arms, and in the motto "Let Glasgow flourish by the preaching of the word", now shortened to "Let Glasgow flourish".

The official "Seal of Glasgow" is identical with the Arms. Button Classics shows this seal as "The Fleece", and headed to the right; while by the unvarying usages of Heraldry, all representations of living things are headed to the left, unless used in supporting positions. Hence this peculiarly isolated representation of "The Fleece" is incapable of being incorporated in any seal or any arms.

The components of the Arms are listed in the following rhyme, often quoted by youthful Glaswegians:

"There's the tree that never grew,
There's the bird that never flew,
There's the bell that never rang, and There's the fish that never swam."

This may refer to the various pictorial representations, or it may be a post-reformation ditty impugning their reality.

In regard to the bird, one story tells that a favorite tame robin of St. Serf was accidentally killed by one of his youthful disciples who laid the blame on Kentigern; whereon as Kentigern made the sign of the cross over it, it was restored to life.

To account for the ring and salmon; King Roderick had given his consort Queen Langueth a precious and peculiar ring, which she foolishly gave to a young courtier. Roderick, coming home from the chase, espied the courtier asleep under a tree and adroitly removed the trinket without awakening him. In a jealous rage he demanded that Langueth produce the ring, on pain of death. As the young courtier could not produce it, she came, in her dire plight, to St. Kentigern who commanded that a line be cast in the River Clyde and that the first fish caught be brought to him, alive. On this being done he took the ring from its mouth — "And they lived happily ever afterward."

The tree represents one which Kentigern restored to life and full foliage after it had gone through the flames, under what circumstances the story fails to reveal.

The bell represents a sacred relic which the saint brought from Rome on one of his seven visits, and was the gift of Pope Gregory.

Than Glasgow, there is no city in the world that is so distinctly typical of the people who have built it. Its well laid out streets, flanked with solid handsome buildings have an air of wealth and economy. The history of its rise into one of the chief producing and trading centers of the world, and the extraordinary industry by which its people succeeded in converting a shallow river into a splendid highway are characteristic of the dogged perseverance and indomitable courage of the Scottish race.

THOSE FAKE BUTTONS

On September 22, 1948, Mrs. Erwina Couse, Mrs. Irma Hills of Candor, New York, Mrs. Dorothy Lloyd of Reading, Pa., and I called on Mr. Morris W. Ringel with reference to the four disputed buttons. We obtained from Mr. Morris W. Ringel the following signed statement:

To whom it may concern:
This is to certify that the buttons purchased from me as advertised in HOBBIES were purchased by me in person in Europe.

Morris W. Ringel
formerly with the American Antique Co. of Owego, N. Y.

The original witnessed by the above mentioned ladies is in my possession.

I am in receipt of a letter from a Frank A. Ralston, Attorney-at-Law of Cincinnati, Ohio, who, represents a Mrs. Pauline Marshall of Bellevue, Ky., stating that Mrs. Pauline Marshall possesses reports from recognized authorities in the field of old buttons such as the Waterbury Companies, Inc., Kenneth J. Mackenzie, Manager of Technical Research at I. B. M. and others who have professionally examined and analyzed these buttons and in the opinion of these experts, the fact is established beyond doubt that the buttons in question are of recent reproduction.

I am addressing letters to the above mentioned companies for transcripts of these reports and findings.

Mrs. Erwina Couse has informed

Button Classics for you.

They make a profit of 30 to 40 per cent on a book, nearly always 40. They do not risk a dime, they do not promote it nor advertise it, nor even display it. HOBBIES created the demand for the book and we see no reason why the book dealer should get $2 profit for simply writing a letter. You write the letter and save $2. In this way, by taking a shorter profit ourselves, we can keep the price at $5.

If you are too lazy to write a letter and insist on running to a book-dealer and adding fuel to the price of inflation, the price is $7. You pay the book-dealer, we refuse to do it. And if you use common sense, willingness to sacrifice, and a little stubbornness you can help lick high prices all along the line. It has also the new index, without extra charge. Those of you who have the old editions can get the index for 50c.

Button Fad

By HERBERT J. SPINNING

I know it may be just a fad,
In fact, I may be button mad;
But deepest pleasure I confess
Comes from these buttons I possess.
They represent so much to me;
In looking at them I can see
A picture built into my mind
Of fabled times, and I can find Myself entranced by Jennie Lind,
Or Ariel dancing in the wind,
Or Rumpelstilzchen and Snow White;
And Tom Thumb always brings delight.
The picture buttons let me roam
With fairy gnomes away from home—
The paperweights have untold charm,
Their very beauty would disarm
The prejudice of anyone
Who didn't love this button fun.
It's just like going on a fling
To run across a button string;—
But for the interest friends have shown
My hobby would have been unknown.
So please if you are button mad,
Get friends to share this button fad.

JEWELLERY

(From "A Guide to the Mediaeval Room," British Museum

Down to the sixteenth century the small articles of personal adornment which we call jewelry were made by silversmiths; but at that period the minuter work called by the Italians minuteria began to occupy the attention of a distinct class of artificers who were now known as jewellers. It is advisable, however, for the avoidance of confusion, to consider the jewels even of the earlier period apart from the larger objects with which they were made.

In the course of the centuries the fate which overtook silver plate also befell ancient jewelry: its intrinsic value proved its ruin. It was melted down to be replaced by work in a newer fashion, or to meet financial needs; or again it was pawned for ready money, even the French crown and the papal tiara having been pledged in their time. Though the royal and princely treasures as recorded, for instance, in inventories of the time of the Valois Kings in France must have been of extraordinary splendour and quite out of proportion to the general wealth, it is only from these written documents that we can estimate their true extent, for nearly all of the objects described have disappeared. The more sumptuous jewels and ornaments of mediaeval date are therefore rare, but what remains suffices to give us a clear idea of certain characteristic forms and methods of ornamentation; for like larger objects, they were affected in their degree by alterations in architectural style or in the forms of lettering, and by all the various fashions of the hour, so that it is usually possible to give them an approximate date.

The ornaments worn upon the person were comparatively few in number. For the Middle Ages, brooches, finger-rings, belts, chains, and pendants almost exhaust the list; while the Renaissance preserved these ornaments, only modying their style, and adding little that was essentially new except the enseigne or disc-shaped ornament affixed to the hat, and the brilliant enamelled and gemmed pendant jewel. A profusion of pearls upon the headdresses and costumes of ladies is also characteristic of the later time. It is difficult, if not impossible, at all events for the earlier periods to distinguish the more ordinary ornaments of one country from those of another; English brooches or rings, for example, are very like French in the fourteenth century, when even the mottoes and short inscriptions were written in French in both countries. Small jewels and ornaments must have been made everywhere, and the numerous examples with English inscriptions prove that articles of native manufacture were similar to those made abroad. In these early times gems were usually cabochon (i. e. polished, but unfaceted stones) in raised settings, the fashion of cutting and facetting surfaces not coming in until the Renaissance. In the rare examples of jewelry of the twelfth or thirteenth centuries, fine filigree was often used in association with gems, but filigree became less popular in later times. From the close of the fourteenth century designs are often filled with enamel; and where whole figures are enamelled, as in the small tableaux, the translucent variety on sunk relief is usually employed. The jewelry of the Middle Ages is largely ornamented with sacred subjects or devices, and the inscriptions are often religious. But this is by no means universally the case, and floral designs in the various Gothic styles, and posies or love mottoes are very frequently found. In England the lettering of such inscriptions is Lombardic (see p. 182) down to the middle of the fourteenth century, and from that time to the Renaissance black-letter; after this the Roman characters come into use.

In the sixteenth century the mediaeval style was abandoned. Gothic floral ornament was replaced by conventional designs, grotesques and strapwork; the engraved saints gave way to Cupids and mythological figures executed in relief or in the round, and chased with the utmost refinement and skill. Gems were now faceted and cut, large baroque pearls freely employed as pendants, and enamel used to cover rounded surfaces. It was the period of Cellini and of the celebrated designers Du Cereau and Etienne Delaulne in France, of Virgil Solis and others in Germany, and of Collaert in Holland. After the beginning of the seventeenth century the human figure became rarer upon jewels, while naturalistic flowers and rosettes composed of gems were the favourite motives of the designer. The multiplication of small gems, finally cut and facetted, marked the work of the eighteenth century, which is in absolute contrast to the old mediaeval method of employing a few large cabochon stones disposed at rare intervals upon the metal. A great deal of information as to the style and character of mediaeval jewelry may be derived from a study of illuminated MSS., and from the perusal of the inventories of kings and great nobles, that of Charles V of France describing with great accuracy numbers of jewels in the royal possession. The sources available for later periods are naturally more numerous, contemporary engravings and pictures reproducing personal ornaments with much fidelity.

Before Inflation

J. W. Bier of the Gyro Lamp and Shade Company of Chicago, found that one of his hobbies paid off in publicity recently. He placed specimens of his collection of news advertisements, some dating back to 100 years, in his store windows. He says the passersby were particularly interested in a page of an 1896 paper but that a clipping from a 1941 advertisement held their attention longer. It advertised butter for 30 cents a pound and ham for 20 cents a pound.

Among Mr. Bier's collection is a book which is dated 1804, offering one of the early explanations for Indian summer. The author, whose name is not known to Bier because of a missing page, wrote that Indian summer is that period in late fall when cool weather is interrupted by a warm spell.

According to the book it was a time of worry for pioneers because it provided Indians with something to think about besides keeping warm. Often the warm air inspired the redskins to take to the warpath in search of scalps.

One clipping which was displayed in the store window gives instructions on how to build a seven room house with high gables and sloping roofs for $1,760. It was taken from a magazine of 1903 and lists labor charges of such an undertaking.

Bargain in Homes

Some prices given were: Excavation and foundation, $115; mason work, $315; lumber, $200; millwork, $250; carpentry, $300; and plastering, $112.

Bier once wrote a history of the neighborhood which he printed in a small publication he edits for business men. In doing research for the article he said he learned that land near Clark St., and Foster Ave. once sold for 60 cents an acre. The Rosehill district, as well as Rosehill cemtery, owes its name to a man named Roe, he said, who operated a tavern at Clark St. and Ridge Ave.

The 1896 newspaper ad listed carpets for 19 cents a yard, oilcloth, 18 cents a yard, wallpaper, 5 cents a roll; men's shirts 48 cents each; two pants wool suits $4.98 ea. felt hats, 48 cents each; shoes, 98 cents a pair, and black pepper, 6 cents a pound.

THE CIRCUS & CHRISTMAS

Claus parade and at toy departments provide inspiration for picture taking and movie making, as well as adding items to scrapbooks as these artists are featured in pre-Christmas newspaper articles.

The circus inspires many unique and original Christmas cards designed by their senders of the circus profession and among the fans. A circusiana collector with a wide acquaintanceship among circus folk and fans, may receive as many as 50 especially designed Christmas cards of circus subjects during the holiday season. This writer has one scrapbook containing several hundred photographs of circus performers, circus fans, and circus scenes which have adorned the Christmas cards he has received in the past 20 years from the profession and the hobbyists.

With the coming of wintry blasts and heavy snowfalls, the circuses go into hibernation, most of them in the sunny clime of the deep south, some few in northern barns, and the circus fan misses his frequent visits to the grassy lots with their billowing canvas, blaring music and pungent odors admist the excitement of circus day.

But the coming of the Christmas season brings many reminders of the circus as some recompense for the absence of the big tops during the long winter months.

Indiana Landmark

This famous house, located at 1339 Poplar Street, one of the first built in what is now Terre Haute in the year 1822, is a land mark of early Indiana. Several attempts have been made to secure it for patriotic societies and preserved as a historical shrine. It is now the property of the E. V. Smiths, coming down from Mrs. Smith's ancestor, Nathaniel Preston who purchased it from the family of Mayor Dewees, the builder in 1843.

It is surrounded by a half block of lawn and trees. The main house stands six feet above ground with a wide veranda and doorway leading into a roomy hall.

The old brick half-story areaway in the rear, of interesting architecture has since been covered to make kitchen and dining rooms. The walls are 18 inches thick and the original black walnut flooring, remains intact, fitted tightly without nails. Original Adam mantels are in place and many pieces of antique hand-made furniture graces the house.

The eastern societies are taking over such historical houses for preservation and the movement ought to spread to the midwest. Here is one that Indiana cannot afford to lose.

What is Lacquer?

The present vogue for lacquered furniture is a revival of one that flourished in the eighteenth century. In France and England the lacquer work imported from China and Japan was extravagantly admired and for a long period the demand exceeded the supply. Its influence on decoration and design was considerable, especially in furniture. In England, Chippendale, the famous cabinetmaker, adapted Oriental ideas to English furniture with great skill and ingenuity.

The term lacquer is from the Hindu word lakb, meaning "one hundred thousand" and indicative of the countless swarms of tiny insects which fasten on the twigs of certain trees in India and form a resinous mass. the larvæ of these insects stick fast to the twigs for several weeks, producing an excretion called lac.

The cultivation of lac is increased to a great extent by the attachment of impregnated twigs to other trees. To obtain the lac dye the red liquid of the incrustation is carefully removed before swarming time. In the manufacture of shellack the resin is crushed into small pieces and thoroughly washed in hot water to free it of all coloring matter, and finally strained through a thick canvass.

Shellac comes to the market in varying shades from rich amber color to a brownish black. Orange lac, the palest shade, is the most valuable, the other shades diminishing in value as the color deepens. Lac forms the basis of most of the fine varnishes, and is also the principal ingredient in sealing wax.

In China and Japan lac is obtained by making incisions in the tree called Urushi-No-Ki, the sap of which supplies a ready-made varnish. One of its peculiarities is that it does not harden in a dry heat, but does if placed in a damp atmosphere for several hours. Once it hardens neither acids nor alcohol will make an impression on its hard and glossy surface.

There are many reasons to suppose that lacquer work is one of the oldest industrial arts in the world. The usefulness of its properties were probably known to even the primitive Chiese and Japanese. Lacquer requires the greatest amount of skill to handle and demands years of experience before it can be made to compare at all with the masterly work turned out by Chinese and Japanese artists. In spite of the fact that European craftsmen have used their best efforts ever since the the eighteenth century to match the masterly work of the Orient they have never quite succeeded.

In India the natives employ lac in many ways. They tint it and make it into bracelets, brooches, chains and other ornaments in imitation of gold. Before cochineal was discovered the coloring matter in lac supplied the rich crimson dye of Persia and India and the deep durable reds of Flemish and Dutch dyers.—Mentor, 1926.

There are some excellent bargains listed above, and we have lots more on hand in the good early items. If the acute scarcity of such things at the sources continues, I do not believe we can replace stock at the prices at which offered. Many will be wonderful gifts that cannot be duplicated, and are as well a sound investment. If you are a buyer who desires the earlier pieces, write me your needs in detail, for your wishes may still be fulfilled at a price you can afford to pay. Air Mail reaches me overnight, and if it was ever made in New England, I'll be able to help you—promptly, courteously, and at a sensible price. May we extend to each of you our wish for every joy and blessing of the Christmas season, and our hope that your New Year shall be a prosperous and a happy one.

the pins they made at prices fixed by the Lord Treasurer; the Pinners, on their part, undertaking to deliver seventy thousand pounds-weight of ordnance half-yearly to the Master of the Ordnance (receiving ten thousand pounds at expiration of the contract), and to pay five hundred a year to Sir Edward Butter, and a fifth of that amount to Sir William Killigrew—that couple of gentlemen making a nice thing out of what Killigrew called 'the pin business.'

'From the custom of husbands, in the days when pins were precious things, allowing their wives so much money for their purchase, sprang the term 'pin-money,' afterwards applied to the income settled upon a woman on her marriage for her own proper use. Addison did not approve of pin-money. He says: 'In proportion as a woman is more or less beautiful, and her husband advanced in years, she stands in need of a greater or less number of pins, and upon a treaty of marriage, rises or falls in her demands accordingly;' and then goes on to ask, what would a foreigner think of a lover giving up his mistress because he was unwilling to keep her in pins? 'But what would he think if he were informed that she asked five or six hundred pounds a year for this use? What a prodigal consumption of pins he would suppose takes place in this island.' After expressing the wish that the allowance had been called needlemoney, so as to have implied 'something of good housewifery, and not have given the malicious world occasion to think that dress and trifles have always the uppermost place in a woman's thoughts,' he declares that she is penny wise and pound foolish who will trust her person to one upon whom she would not rely for the common necessaries of life, and finishes up with the suggestion, that every owner of an estate should mark out so many acres of it to be devoted to his wife's use, and called 'The Pins.'

"We have modern poetical authority that once,

"Upon Saint Agnes' Eve,
Young virgins might have visions of delight,
And soft adorings from their loves receive
Upon the honeyed middle of the night,
If ceremonies due they did aright;

one of these ceremonies being the taking of a row of pins, and pulling them out one by one while repeating a paternoster. Then, by sticking a pin in his or her sleeve, the prying, love-sick damsel or youth might insure sweet dreams of a sweet companion for life. Near most Cornish wells, says Mr. Haslam, pins may be collected by handfuls; but these pin-wells into which passers-by drop a pin as they go, in order to propitiate the fairy of the waters, are not confined to the county of Tre, Pol, and Pen, but are found in several parts of England. At a holy well in Wales, dedicated of old time to the Virgin Mary, and supposed to be under her especial guardianship, it is customary to throw in a crooked pin, in the belief that if the dropper possess faith, all the other pins within the well may be seen rising from the depth profound to greet and welcome the new-comer.

"Birmingham, into which the trade was introduced about a hundred years ago, is now the headquarters of the pin-manufacture. Then a single pin passed through fourteen pair of hands in the operations of straightening the wire, pointing, cutting into pin lengths, twisting wire for heads, cutting heads, annealing heads, stamping heads, cleaning pins, whitening, washing, drying and polishing, winnowing, paper-pricking, and finally papering up. Adam Smith, arguing on the advantages of the division of labour, can find no better illustration than that afforded in the making of a pin. 'Not only the whole work is a peculiar trade, but it is divided into a number of branches, of which the greater part are likewise peculiar trades. One man draws out the wire, another straightens it, a third cuts it, a forth points it, a fifth grinds it at the top for receiving the head; to make the head requires two or three distinct operations; to put it on is a peculiar business, to whiten the pin is another; it is even a trade by itself to put them into the papers; and the important business of making a pin is, in this manner, divided into about eighteen distinct operations, which in some manufactories are all performed by distinct hands, though in others the same man will sometimes perform two or three of them. I have seen a small manufactory of this kind, where ten men only were employed, and were some of them consequently performed two or three distinct operations. But though they were poor, and therefore but indifferently accommodated with the necessary machinery, they could, when they exerted themselves, make among them about twelve pounds of pins in a day. There are in a pound upwards of four thousand of a middling size. Those ten persons, therefore, could make among them upwards of forty-eight thousand pins in a day.

"Adam Smith would now have to seek elsewhere for illustrations of the benefit of division of labour, thanks to the American Wright, who brought out, in 1824, a machine producing a perfect pin during the revolution of a single wheel. This machine, improved in many ways, is that employed at the largest pin-factory in Birmingham at the present day.

"Pin papers are generally marked by means of a moulded piece of wood, the moulds corresponding to those portions representing the small folds through which the pins are passed and held. The paperer, usually a girl, gathers two of the folds of the paper together, and places them — a small portion projecting — between the jaws of a vice, having grooves channelled in them, to serve as a guide for the placing of the pins. When filled, the paper is released, and held so that the light strikes upon it, when the eye at once detects every defective pin, and the ready hand removes it. One house consumes three tons of brass wire per week in producing these ever-wasted utilities, the consumption of which in this country alone is calculated at fifteen millions per day."

easy to achieve the desired effect without some professional photographic knowledge or guidance, particularly where lighting is involved.

If you are fortunate enough to have an amateur photographer among your friends, you may get your cards made at small cost, since there are on the market regular outfits for producing photographic greeting cards. Otherwise, you can have it done by a photofinisher, most of whom are prepared to print pictures on a card with an appropriate message. I have always used a white card, either vertical or horizontal, with a place-sunk effect, a simple Christmas greeting, and a conventionalized candle as a Yule touch. However, ones originallity can run riot with both wording and ornamentation when an informal card is desired — the decorative possibilities of color, for instance.

Give your Christmas cards a personal touch — the appealing touch of a doll on the human heart.

Trade Problems

Business Policy

Dear Mrs. M.

If you lost money from buying items advertised and misrepresented in HOBBIES, we will send you our check for the loss; but we cannot assume responsibility for the acts of a dealer in transactions in which HOBBIES is not concerned. That is expecting entirely too much of us. We, at different times receive letters stating they entered into trading relations with dealers, thinking they were all right because they saw them advertising in HOBBIES. That cannot be expected to cover all the multiple acts of an advertiser.

Stick to what you see advertised in HOBBIES, and you will have no ultimate loss. If you go into extraneous negotiations and trades you do so on your own. If you buy from lists you must do that at your own risk. Sometimes a dealer may put stuff in lists that he would not dare advertise in HOBBIES.

When we get such complaints as yours we file them carefully; and if we get several, we have a right to assume the dealer is unreliable and exclude him on general principles.

In your case you should have protected yourself by demanding that the articles be shipped subject to inspection. If they do not want to do that, don't buy. That is a simple rule of business. If you old gray-haired ladies, as you call yourself, are going into business, you must expect to have to learn business. We cannot be expected to pay for your experience.

For Mutual Interest

"All we are interested in is keeping the confidence of our readers. That is to your interest as well as ours. You say you have used HOBBIES for 20 years, yet you would drop it like a hot potato if the readers lost confidence in the advertisers and refused to answer ads. That is why we appear to be cranky at times. But, we repeat, it is to your interest as well as ours. A few careless advertisers can hurt HOBBIES as well as all the other advertisers."

—o—

To a Subscriber

"We thank you for writing us about having a representative at your coming show. It is not the number of magazines sold at a show that counts, it is the percentage of renewals.

Most magazines give the solicitor all they get the first year and then have no money to buy labor and paper to produce a good magazine. The result is they get a small percentage of renewals.

We get the full price for our subscriptions and put in it full value. HOBBIES circulation mounts steadily because 95 per cent renew and all of them recommend it to others because it is the largest and best.

We would rather get our full subscription price and give it back to the subscriber in big value than to give all to high pressure salesmen and have to get out a scrawny magazine because we have given away our revenue. Besides, the more we get from subscribers the less we have to charge the advertiser. It stands to reason that if we take a loss in one department we have to make it up in the other—or go broke—which many of them do.

—o—

Express Packing

Dear Sir:

I sent a dollar bill to . . . . . ., Los Angeles, California, more than a month ago for a Geographic Index book and after waiting a few weeks, I sent a letter stating the facts and up to the present time I haven't received any reply. I, as a buyer and seller, using the mails always answered any reasonable inquiry but in this case, the above people feel otherwise.

Thank you,
F. L. New York.

If you have not learned not to send currency by mail you just have to pay for your experience. It costs us at the very least 35c in time and postage to write a letter. The post office will not pay attention to such complaints. They naturally assume you should know better. If we get more than one complaint we discontinue the ad because we feel sure there is something wrong but we discourage sending money through the mails.

—o—

Grief From List Buying

"For many years I have been a collector of antiques and a subscriber to HOBBIES. During this time practically all purchases have been made through your advertisers. Until recently all my dealings have been very satisfactory, but I have now had a most unpleasant experience and am calling upon you for a candid opinion and advise for action in settlement.

For almost a year I have been corresponding with . . . . . of . . . . . in regard to certain articles that I wish for my home. While I have purchased various small articles from him, the main purpose of correspondence was about an antique tall chest of drawers. After my first letter of inquiry for the chest, he put me on his mailing list and I regularly received these mimeographed lists. Several times I sent a check for a chest on his list, the check returned because chest was sold. On 7/23/48 I wired . . . ., ordering a chest from his latest list, specifying certain conditions. This was followed the next day by a check and a letter further elaborating on the condition the chest must be in before executing the order, etc.

—Mrs. A. B. B., Nevada.

You must make your own adjustments if you buy from lists. We cannot assume responsibility for what is sold through lists any more than we can for what is sold in a dealer's store.

This party had an inch ad in HOBBIES probably to get a mailing list. Most times they want to sell by list because they know they won't have to make adjustments. It would be cheaper to publish their list in HOBBIES. The postage alone at 1c for each mailing piece to reach HOBBIES' readers would be nearly $500. They could get a whole page for $125 or $100 on yearly contract. But they would have to make adjustments in case of dissatisfaction. The list scheme gets the buyer's money and lets him go hang if he doesn't like what he gets.

The buyer, risking his money sight—unseen should have some assurance against gyps. That is what HOBBIES provides.

The occasional advertiser who uses our columns to obtain names for his business is taken out of the magazine if we get several complaints, even though the complaints arise from lists and not from orders through the pages of the magazine. We simply know he is unreliable on general principle. But the reader has no right to assume that because they saw a dealer advertise a year ago and therefore that we had investigated him and so justify confidence. We had, but we can't guarantee all his actions, his credit, and his future conduct. Naturally, we cannot help you if you get in trouble through this means. In keeping our pages clean we have all we can be expected to do.

System in Reading Ads

Below is a suggestion I thought you might like to pass on to other slow readers among your subscribers, who have as little time as I, and yet do not want to miss anything in HOBBIES' many columns which particularly appeal to them. It is this: I take a plain white card and move it slowly down each column of print. I do not read, but as the card travels, those words that interest me—Meissen, ivory, eloisonne—seem to jump up at me! I learned the trick from a newspaper editor and since practicing it, do not think I have missed a single item I particularly want to see, and I cover the whole magazine in a very short time.—Anna G. O'Higgins, Florida.

A Trick

"In looking over my September HOBBIES I found an ad under "Wanted to Buy". For your information she is one of the boldest dealers who passes off reproductions for old glass in these parts. She blithely tells her customers that Mrs.——— (an authority on old glass in this vicinity) says that so and so is old glass, when the lady mentioned has not even been in her shop for months and has not passed judgment on the authenticity of the glass.

We thank you for writing us and will file the information. It is pretty hard for us to police the industry in regards to all their activities.

We can legally concern ourselves only in their actions resulting from advertising in HOBBIES. However, if we ever get complaints against this party we will know how to act. Some people make offside plays but are extremely careful that they do not originate complaints from their ad in HOBBIES.

Experiences

Kansas — I think your stand against dishonesty is a very commendable one, and also very much needed. It seems that the temptation to cheat when dealing by mail is one entirely too great for the poor weak flesh of a far too large number. I'm herewith giving you a few names that I've found to be absolutely unreliable. Michael Howard, who has evidently played himself out. I see you offered a reward for his whereabouts. Power to you! I ordered two "gorgeous lamps" which he advertised. When they came they were just some old parts thrown in a box and shipped. You couldn't possibly fit them together and make lamps out of them. He got them back, but I was out transportation.
—Grace M. Gill, Kans.

—o—

Michael Howard seems to be in a lot of grief, but it doesn't bother Michael as much as it does his victims. The trouble with Russian born friends who come over here and change their names is that they have used their pressure gang stuff so much and so successfully that they make the mistake of thinking everybody is afraid of them, including the postal inspectors, and that they are above the law.

Some of the correspondence on the case bears this out. There are too many now operating through the mails who do not seem to fear the law, probably because they have lodge brothers honeycombed through law channels, but are afraid of the publicity because it stops their operations.

There has been a lot of pressure put on Michael from different angles but after many months there are still some holding the bag.

A Maine dealer wrote that Howard gave him a check for $500 for some antiques but the check was no good. He later, through a lawyer, got two-thirds of it.

Mrs. J. C. Osborne, of Illinois, is out $155 and has had the postal inspectors on the case.

Mrs. J. G. Nealis of Memphis, would like to get $45 back because she is ill and needs the money.

The Antique House of Houston, Texas, has a good word to say for him although they are still out $70 after much worry and labor.

"On May 28, 1948 we sent him an order for five hundred and fifty dollars with our check to cover. The check was cashed immediately but never acknowledged and repeated letters from us were ignored. Finally on July 12, 1948, I wrote to him and cancelled the order and instructed him to return our money. This, too, was ignored. When the ad offering a reward for information concerning his whereabouts came out in HOBBIES, we wrote you asking further information, and in the meantime, we had our bank write his bank, we notified the F. B. I. and the Postal Authorities. The net result was that Mr. Howard shipped us merchandise immediately amounting to $480.00. The merchandise seems to be as represented and we are pleased with it.

"The other seventy dollars has not been forthcoming, although we have written about it and even drawn a draft on Mr. Howard which was refused.

"We cannot help wishing that if Mr. Howard is in serious financial difficulty, he would be frank about it and give his creditors an opportunity to work out something that would have satisfied them and saved his reputation."

Sincerely yours,
The Antique House,
Frances Wiggs.

We, too, think Michael is honest. In fact, around Cape Cod they call him "Honest Mike" but he is dilatory because he was taught from childhood to call us "The American boobs".

Working Hard At It

I note your letter from our friend Mr. Torrey of New London. We have known Mr. Torrey the past three years; have bought from him and have sold to him; he is a reliable dealer to the best of my knowledge, and I am sure that what you printed about the Missouri magazine dealers selling a farm paper are all true. However, I can tell you one that beats that.

The same agents worked all the territory around here, and they brought their wives, and while the men worked in the country, some of the wives made every house in the small towns. Not one hut was left that had not been solicited and naturally they obtained some outstanding antiques.

Some places where they could not gain admittance, the next day they would take a lamp or some piece of china or glass, and ask if they had any thing that would match, in order to get into the house. However, some of our county Social Security Workers have done the same thing. Except they bought articles from old age pensioners, and Aid to Dependent Children drawers.
—Mrs. Chas. P. Harris, Missouri.

Collectors, Send a Stamped Envelope for Return of Check

I advertised an egg cup in HOBBIES. The price was low, as I did not know its exact value. The cup cost me $1. I added the cost of the ad for it and $1 profit. I received 42 checks for the egg cup. Only one person enclosed a return stamped envelope. I had to return 41 checks at three cents each and I was out 23 cents instead of making $1. This has happened to me several times. So why not urge buyers to send a stamped envelope?

Another dealer had a similar experience and she sent each would-be buyer a post card, stating that she had destroyed their check. Result: she was threatened with a lawsuit by one dealer. She saved a few cents but developed a headache over the threat of a lawsuit. What is the correct thing to do?—D. J. Snyder, New York.

Editor's note: Don't destroy checks, return them.

Racket

I thought you might be interested in the following clipping (from Rural New Yorker, October 9).

There is a rather mean racket being worked around the Albany-Schenectady area. It works as follows: An antique dealer arrives at a house and admires some bulky piece of furniture. He then offers about twice its value for it. If the offer is accepted, he agrees to send his truck for it and pay for it when he gets it. Then he proceeds to buy some china and glass. He offers low prices for these but the owner usually thinks he is making up on the large piece what he loses on the small articles. He doesn't realize until later that he has been buncoed. The dealer takes the small articles with him and is not heard from again. In many cases the farmer, thinking the large furniture to be of great value, holds it indifinitely and thus loses not only the first sale but maybe several more possible sales in the future.—W. B. T., Schenectady, N. Y.

There is a racket in antiques as well as in many other lines and it behooves one to know with whom he or she is dealing. If these wandering dealers realized the harm they work on themselves by their glib promises and faulty performance, they would try being sincere. We warrant they would do more business and have satisfied instead of disappointed and disillusioned customers.

This racket has been worked in the country and small towns through the Susquehanna Valley, our town included. One of my near neighbors, a fine, unsuspecting old lady being "taken in." The caller represented himself to be from Schoharie, N. Y., bargained for a lot of her old furniture, primitive paintings, etc., saying he would return for them "next week" with his truck. Of course he never came back for he had managed to get from her some glass, china and jewelry.

I always enjoy so much "The Publisher's Page" in HOBBIES and get a lot of pleasure from your many fine articles. —Mrs. Charles M. Oles, N. Y.

Another Experience With the Same Ilk

Mr. George Welsh of Ohio, in November HOBBIES under "Trade Problems," says: "Watch for These." Apparently the same two women who claimed to be from Canada, with their Oriental rugs, visited us dealers in the small Lake of Ozark towns in Missouri with the same story, but they had the rugs in the car with them. However, when here, the car bore Indiana license tags.

It may interest you to know that they sold the rugs in . . . . . Missouri. I do not know whether to an individual collector or not, but I presume it was, as there is not a dealer there that I know of and its only 30 miles from me.

That was week before last. Last week our highway patrol were enroute to the town, to pick up the rugs. But for more information as to who made the complaint to the patrol, I do not know. However, I suspected they were hot, and was not interested.

The same two, sold linen table cloths and napkins in another Missouri town, (canvassed from house to house).

After the purchaser paid for the cloth and napkins the traveling saleswomen, told her they could have them painted in colors or flowers of her choosing, but "the woman who does the painting lives in a small town, Hickory Hill, Mo. We will have the painting done and return the napkins next Wednesday."

The buyer decided to let them take them to be painted. The Wednesday they were to be returned has not yet arrived and the buyer is minus the napkins and money.

At Garden City, Mo., the same racket of house to house selling of new fur coats has proved that the fur coats, too, were hot.

The women first ask $200 for a 12x15′ rug, $175 for the 9x12′ and $25 for the 6x9′. Before they left they ask $200 for all three rugs. Don't think this Lake of the Ozark region doesn't get everything that comes along. Reproduction in glassware — I heartily agree that we should have a law to require factories to mark each and every piece.—Mrs. Chas. P. Harris, Missouri.

Also Had Callers

I was interested in the letter from George Welsh, Ohio, published in your November issue, as the same "lovely ladies" called at my shop a couple of months ago.

The story was the same, the approach being that a sister, a Mrs. Thompson, who had recently bought things from

GEARHART'S BARN

Foot-O-Ten Antiques

Box 75, Route 2, Duncansville, Pa.

GREETINGS, EVERYBODY! The old country store is warm and cozy, as I enter today. I see cellophane in rolls and bales, enough to cover a house it seems, before I can ask about it, Had says, Hello Gary, can you tie a bow knot? I can see no harm in saying, I can, then I ask about the cellophane. Had grins, and points to window, saying, Ma's Christmas present. I see a beautiful new red car on driveway. I look at Had, he is grinning and tells me he can wrap the car in cellophane, but the bow knot, for roof, is worrying him. It is now worrying me and I quickly tell him I have arthritis, and can't climb. Never mind, he says, we will turn it over on its side on the grass, then he real beams. Guess I am caught again.

I see a couple of his bargain signs. One reads, Turkey in the straw 25c lb, turkey from the coop 70c lb. I like bargains so I inquire about turkey in the straw. Oh they are some still in the field I couldn't catch; cooped I am. The other sign reads, Try a bottle of our cough syrup the easy way. I like easy chores, and ask, how come? With never a quiver he says, Cough up a dollar. Gee, wish I would think of some thing, dear readers, to make you cough up for these bargains. Cheerio and a Merry Christmas.

Historical association adds distinction to glassware

CHRISTMAS EVE PLATE

Christmas

The world's most famous holiday commemorates the birth of the world's most famous baby; the Baby who changed the whole current of world affairs; the Baby whose coming brought the message of "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men."

The Christmas season of many years ago was different from that of today in superficial respects, yet those things essential to the celebration of the day were present. Christmas carols, Christmas cheer, Christmas trees and holly, Christmas gifts and Christmas joy were blended as an offering to Him, symbolic of the remembrance of others. No one has ever been too poor and humble to make life more abundant for those about him through some gift of service. No one has ever been too rich and powerful to need to learn that "Peace on Earth" does come to those who show "Good Will to Men" through service. This is the spirit of Christmas-time.

In glassware, we find a number of dishes ornamented with holly, some with both mistletoe and holly, and several items featuring Santa Claus, who is the personification of the Christmas Spirit and dear to the hearts of everyone.

An alphabet border plate shows Santa making his Christmas Eve rounds. He has used a ladder to reach the top of a brick chimney and is just stepping inside the flue. He carries a pack full of toys slung over one shoulder. Snowshoes, a saddle, a drum and drumsticks, dolls, and other gifts are fastened around his waist. A clown wearing a neck ruff and cap suggestive of those worn by a court jester, an elephant, and a horn, top the pack. Unless that chimney is flexible, Santa should have lightened his pack before attempting to descend, for it looks as though a rescue squad might be needed. The words: "Christmas Eve" are inscribed just above Santa Claus. The background of border and design is finely stippled, and the central part is frosted. It is crystal glass, six inches in diameter.

CHRISTMAS GIFT PLATE

This large plate must have provided Christmas joy for someone, many years ago. A design (fashioned from sprays of holly, mistletoe, and berries), is combined with "letters of light" to create a handsome gift. "Letters of Light" are made up of small dewdrops, and are intended to represent letters fashioned by incandescent light bulbs.

One feels a great respect for the mold makers' skill, when studying this design. More than one thousand perfectly round dewdrops and berries; a garland of Christmas greens with leaves finely stippled; a sunburst center; a scalloped and ribbed border, all combine to produce a silvery effect that rivals much of the lacy Sandwich glassware. Lucky lady who first received this plate. Lucky lady, now, who secures a surviving specimen. It is crystal glass, ten inches in diameter.

On the way now for four months in St. Augustine. It is with a much lighter heart than last year. Now the the moving is almost completed, after a year and a half of hauling. The balance needs no attention from me. It is a relief to have it over. The breakage was at times heart-rending. The thievery was awful. When men who worked in the moving found it had been given away, their psychological reaction was that they should help themselves without compunction. Insurance companies would not cover theft, and damage was limited to 30c a hundred pounds.

Of the collection of historical glass all but a few pieces were broken. Large mirrors and plate glass costing up to $200 each were 50 per cent broken. In taking some losses on irreplaceable articles it was necessary to pull yourself together. We contracted some loads out last winter which cost $1000 a load and there was more grief on those than our own loads. When I was there to direct the loading we almost invariably loaded in one day at a cost of around $30. When left to a truck-driver he would take three days and run the cost to over $130.

I will not forget the misgivings that pressed upon me a year ago. After a summer of convalescing from a serious illness the work that lay before me loomed multitudinous.

It was a gamble with fate, and I knew it. The fact is that the project was in the balance after it was started. As we got into the work of moving, a job that many said was impossible under the circumstances, obstacles that seemed insurmountable really cropped up. There was grief coming up at the other end. I could not be in two places at one time and the precarious state of my health precluded the possibility of traveling back and forth.

At home, those surrounding me were opposed to the plan, mostly from the angle that I would not have the strength to take the grief and see it carried out. About the first of September I stopped the truck by telegram while I considered for a week the idea of taking my loss, giving them the building and the material already sent and abandon the project. I asked no advice from anyone, feeling that I should make my own decision and allow no one to influence it.

An eastern publisher with a certified check in his pocket stayed in town that week, calling on me daily in my bed-room, urging me to sell HOBBIES and "take it easy." That, to my way of thinking, was always a short cut to oblivion.

I knew if I went ahead there would be no turning back from then on. It meant accomplishing a great museum project or die trying. I decided that I'd never got anywhere anyhow without a lot of work and grief and I thought I would prefer to drop on the job than to quit on the job.

We went ahead, much to the dismay of some of our associates and much to the chagrin of some in St. Augustine who told on the streets that I was sick and would never live to carry out the plan. Some were quite disappointed that I did not die. They wanted the building for a recreational center, a big saloon, dance hall, bowling alley, pool hall and what-have-you; not the leading citizens, but some. Others had rackets there which prey on the visitors and they thought the museum eventually would become so large and important that it would overshadow their rackets and injure them. It will. Others brought pressure to bear on me to revamp the swimming pool. It was the largest indoor pool in the country but would cost at least $50,000 to rehabilitate it. Whoever would undertake it in a town of 12,000 people would go broke. The pool never paid even when three large hotels were operating there and thousands of wealthy people wintered in St. Augustine. A swimming pool had no tie-up with a museum, there was not a word about it in the agreement and I gave it no consideration whatever.

On the other hand we did spend considerable to floor over the pool into a sunken garden effect and turn it into one of the most attractive auditoriums in the country. This hall will serve the city for public meetings and the museum for educational work.

There was also the equation of the hop-on folks. It seemed that everybody who never had any luck at anything was sure that here was their ship finally sailing in. They wanted to help me but there was not one thing they could work at to help the museum. They wanted to help themselves by getting on the pay-roll.

We ran the gauntlet of everything from moochers to blackmailers.

What peeved me more than anything was the remarks, "I did this for him" and " I did that for him."

Nobody did anything for me, they did it for the people of St. Augustine just as I did. I had no ownership in it whatever and no way to profit from what was done there. There was some jealousy on the part of a few because they or their friends were not asked to go on the Board of Trustees. But they rotate. There are only two permanent ones, both men of high caliber and utterly above small stuff. Two are political. One went off with administration change the first of the year. The fifth is president of the Historical Society and they are not a close corporation run by a small clique. They change their officers so as to pass the honor around and afford an opportunity for others to serve. There will probably be a new face here before long. Thus these things iron themselves out.

"The city won't get a thing out of it," they said. "These five men men will get everything".

No city gets anything from a museum or a library or a college.

They are civic assets but not profit makers. Nor is there any way whatever for "these five men" to get a cent.

This was the same bunch that kept the Marine Studios out of St. Augustine. This institution, which so many of you have visited, wanted to locate at St. Augustine. The racket owners agitated against it saying they didn't want an aquarium there. The result was an irretrievable loss to the city.

One old lady, slightly "teched", tells visitors that taxes on her property were raised $85 a year on account of the museum. City officials assured me there was no increased taxes at all on account of the museum, and if there were it would amount to no more than 50c on the average piece of property. Some of the visitors remarked that they wonder what made their taxes at home go up when the town did not get a new museum.

A foreign group who do not like us America-firsters told around that I was getting ready to float a stock issue and would take the town for a lot of money. I even heard that I was going to run for office.

Of course there was some talk of that "Chicago Yankee coming down here getting that building for nothing." The building stood there 14 years empty, so if anybody wanted it they had plenty of chance to get it.

But there isn't much of that feeling down there anymore, very little. Besides, I didn't get it for myself. I got it for the people of St. Augustine.

Some people are so ignorant and crooked in their own thinking they can't conceive that anything of this kind could be done without an ulterior motive of some kind. But as time goes on these rumors prove groundless and are soon forgotten.

There were some tradesmen who had no interest in the place whatever as an institution of culture. They overcharged, but we found it out and considered that we bought them cheap. Some thought that we were a soft-brained easy mark with an unlimited bank roll and over-flowing with altruism. Such people woke up to realities when they found I was a tough egg.

We had a display case that cost $50. In shipping down the curved glass got broke, a piece about 3x6'. The glass company billed us $450 for the replacement. That insulting charge could not have been made except with the idea in mind that here was an easy-mark.

A few days later I read where this company earned $23,095,998.00 in the first nine months of this year. I put the report away in the safe for future use. There is something rotten in the glass business in this country and I will hear thousands of "bravos" to that. There's a job for the U. S. Dept. of Justice in that field.

A year has passed and all that has died down. As the grounds and building have been improved and beautified and more and more exhibits set up and more treasure poured in, the people as a whole have begun to realize what it will eventually mean. The best people always did but there would be some in every locality who have no imagination to absorb the possibilities of such an institution.

It has been organized now as a going concern—not a fifty million dollar throw-away free-for-all, as some imagined, but as a hard-headed, practical public asset like a high school, conducted on a frugal budget, the same as all other museums.

The State of Florida recently appropriated $200,000 for a Stephen Foster museum on the Suwannee River. Many times that has been put in this museum. It cost much more than the Bok Tower and is on a larger scale than the Ringling Museum.

As it blossoms forth from season to season it will portray itself in imperishable fame. To this end I have had the help, encouragement and cooperation of the city's best element. The museum will live; the rackets will die.

Just a final word to HOBBIES family. The door men tell me, on a few occasions visitors have remarked "if we could see Mr. Lightner he would let us in free. We subscribe to his Magazine."

That is just what I cannot do. The museum is a tax-free public institution. It can have no legal connection whatsoever with HOBBIES. We hope that no friend of ours will jeopardize its status. The admission is set by the Board of Trustees as well as policies and general rules of conduct. I am there as temporary manager. After this winter I will probably be only an occasional visitor. If any future manager violates such an important rule I would favor his immediate discharge. Last winter, when a guard let some people in who claimed they were friends of my family I immediately discharged him as an example to the others. It is very important that no technicality be permitted to risk its tax-exempt position.

A. C. Lightner

HOBBIES has a deal on to sell its property on Michigan Ave., Chicago, where it has been published for 20 years. We have an option on another and larger property with a view to making it our future home. Before we make final decision we wish to appeal to our readers to notify us at once if there is a building in your town that can be secured for HOBBIES.

Such a building must be dignified, permanent and available at a normal price for cash. It must be located in the central states where mail can reach all the country quickly and the 2nd class mail zoning rates are favorable. Extreme sections of the country in any direction are out of the question.

We could use a building of 20,000 to 100,000 square feet, heavy floor load at least on first floor. Please write us.

Saints of St. Augustine

Hotels of the ancient city are preparing for the season's top crowd when the second annual Antiques Show is on January 23 - 27. Visitors are planning their trips to be there at the time and the Southeastern dealers and collectors who can get there in a day's drive make a necessary business trip of it because the show constitutes the largest market in all the south. Outside of New York and Chicago it is the largest show in the country.

—o—

GIFTS

Sam Yeagley, show promotor, donates a historical handkerchief commemorating the Columbian Exposition, 1892.

—o—

Clyde M. Farney saw a fine Victorian bed in a window display in his home town in Pennsylvania. It was on loan from a local owner. He visualized how fitting it would be in proper setting in the Museum so he bought it, crated it nicely and shipped it as a gift to St. Augustine. There are two other pieces in the set that he is trying to get and they will probably come later. This is one of our best gifts so far.

—o—

Francis J. Miller, of Ohio, who has his own private museum, sends a colorful scrapbook and a frame of tobacco tags. He wonders why more has not been printed about tobacco tags, which every boy collected 60 years ago. We have a fine collection in Hobbies Museum and a Florida collector is going to give us another as soon as we can get down to Orlando.

—o—

Olive Orsborn, Illinois, sends a woman's fur cap of the covered wagon days, high button shoes, a pair of celluloid cuffs, silk plaid dress, old almanacs, a bustle and numerous other items of pioneer apparel. They are all curios to the present generation.

—o—

Mrs. C. N. Marsh of Wisconsin, sends a silver mesh bag for the museum's extensive collection.

—o—

Mrs. W. E. Shaffer of Michigan, takes a great interest in the Museum. This month she sends another box of old costume material.

—o—

The rarely beautiful imported water lilies now blooming in the pool in the patio of the Lightner Museum are well worth seeing.

A stroll into the patio, and across the bridge that spans the pool, will vouchsafe a view of some magnificent blooms. They are in beautiful shades of blue, rose, and purple. There are also some white ones.

The lily pads or leaves are of great size, and cover a large part of the surface of the pool, where a number of gold fish have been placed. The roots and leaves of the lilies offer food and shelter for the fish.

—St. Augustine Record.

More Historical Stones

Dr. Henry De Witt Watson, New York State, who has generously contributed several things for the Museum has also sent an interesting collection of stones. One is from the so-called David Harum farm, near the village of Homer, N. Y., Dr. Watson states: "You will recall in the play Homer was spoken of as 'Homeland'. I have a picture of him with some others and horses taken in front of his Homer village residence but his farm from which the stone came was his principal "hold-out."

"Another stone is from the underpinning of the home where John D. Rockefeller was born. A portion of the house has been moved away, but the main part of the house is still there. It is vine clad with five leaf ivy, and it sits on a little pinnacle on a hillside but is weather worn and time crumbling. The floors have holes in them and plaster has largely fallen from the walls, however we went through upstairs, and basement. The farm is located on an unimproved dirt road in the town of Richford, Cortland County, New York."

We are about to put up our collection of playing cards in the museum. Some of them are giant size and some two centuries old. If you have old playing cards you no longer have use for, either one for its back scene or design or the entire deck, please send them.

LETTERS

Crystal Lake, Illinois—"Sorry that on account of illness, I had to miss the Antique Show at the Stevens last week. But I did get down to the one and only Hobbies Museum at St. Augustine last February 17th, which in itself, was worth the trip to Florida. Am looking forward to another visit there this winter. Sincerely."—Marge Lindahl.

oOo

Washington, D. C.—I was in Florida last month, stopped at Jacksonville and spent an afternoon at St. Augustine, most of it in your wonderful Hobby Museum. I enjoyed it so much, I don't know when I ever saw so many beautiful things I should have been happy if I could have stayed for a week looking at the many interesting collections. — Mrs. John Sirola.

oOo

Florida—A friend and I went to St. St. Augustine last Sunday and we went to The Museum of Hobbies. We really enjoyed it and were amazed how extensive the hobby exhibits are. It is really a wonderful collection and should be a "must" on everyone's trip to Florida, although I consider it well worth a special trip to this state for everyone in this country.—Crystal Palmer.

oOo

Exceeded Expectations.

Wisconsin—There certainly would be something of great importance missing in our home if we did not get HOBBIES regularly. I did so enjoy my visit at the Museum in St. Augustine last winter. It was far beyond my expectations. —Helen Marsh.

They're Coming.

Michigan—Enclosed please find my renewal to HOBBIES. It is on my must list. We plan to visit the Lightner Museum in St. Augustine in January, 1949. With best wishes to the publisher, editor and staff of a swell magazine. — Mrs. Loren L. Gibson.

oOo

Georgia Visitors.

Georgia—I enjoy my HOBBIES very much. Mr. Valentino and I visited the Museum in St. Augustine, and really enjoyed it.—Mrs. J. G. Valentino.

me, had directed them to me. They started out with the Oriental rugs and when I told them I did not deal in rugs, they asked if they might show me one so that if someone inquired for Orientals I would know about their stocks. That sounded fair enough and I called in one of my neighbors to look at them. Then I became suspicious and started asking questions.

"Where does your sister live?, etc. Here they made the first mistake. One of them said that she had recently bought a "Gone With The Wind" lamp from me. It just so happened that I knew each person who had bought lamps in the shop recently. Then, to complicate matters, the friend whom I had called in, decided to buy, not one but two of the rugs from them, and her husband went down town to get the money from his bank to pay for them. My friend went back home and the two "Canadians" were to wait until the husband returned with the money. They rolled up the rugs, becoming more and more nervous. In the meantime a couple of ladies came to call at my home and I slipped out, going to my neighbor's house and telling her that I was suspicious of them (as their stories did not match) and that she should have someone look at the rugs for her before paying for them.

Well, when the husband returned with the money ($275) his wife informed him, and he told the women he wanted his sister to look at them as she knew more about Orientals than he did. At that they began to load the rugs into their car (which carried an Indiana license plate), saying that they could not wait any longer, and they left in a great hurry. A sad part of the story is that a new plastic raincoat (one of those that fold up into an envelope) belonging to my son, took its departure with them.

These two slick operators were claiming the two rugs to be very old ones, that a brother had brought back to them when he returned from service. I sincerely hope that someone will turn them in very soon, and put an end to this racket. — Esther F. Coppernoll, New York.

Stamp News From Here and There

November was a busy month for stamp collectors. The Will Rogers stamp was issued at Claremore, Okla., on November 4; Fort Bliss at El Paso, Tex., November 5; Moina Michael at Athens, Ga., on November 9; Gettysburg at Gettysburg, Pa., on November 19; American Turners at Cincinnati, Ohio, on November 20.

Lovers of the Uncle Remus stories as well as stamp collectors are looking forward to the three-cent Joel Chandler Harris issue which will be first released from Eatonton, Ga., on December 9.

Walter T. Shirley, New York business executive, has recommended that the post office department sell advertising space on the mucilage side of the postage stamp.

Shirley, who is enlisting the assistance of philatelists and advertising firms in the drive to effect savings to taxpayers and prevent further postal rate increases cites historical references to back up his plan.

Says he: "France and Belgium permitted advertising in their booklets containing postage stamps. The Union of South Africa allowed advertising material on the margins of stamp sheets, and Italy attached advertising matter on its stamp sheets. New Zealand successfully issued stamps with commercial messages on the mucilage side. In the case of those nations, revenue was substantial and was used for efficient maintenance of postal service with a minimum of cost to the tax-payer.".

Catalogs on the Harold L. Ickes stamp collection have been mailed to prospective buyers. The sale was scheduled for November 15 to 22.

Dispersal of the large Philippine collection formed by Ferrara H. Tows, consisting of 1752 lots in all, is being distributed at auction. Carl E. Pelander is handling the sale. A section of the sale devoted to Cuba and Puerto Rico will be sold early in January, according to present plans.

The first-day sale of the Indian Centennial commemorative stamp sold at Muskogee, Okla., on October 15, totaled 1,120,000 and 459,528 covers were canceled.

It is expected that our Post Office Department will issue a four-cent stamp on January 1, 1949, for the convenience of those who send post cards by mail. Beginning January 1, the present rate of five cents on each airmail post and postal card will be reduced to four cents. The present rate on airmail letters, five-cents an ounce, will be raised to six-cents on January 1, and this will also undoubtedly call for a new stamp. Special delivery will be raised to 15 cents, and this, too, will probably call for a new stamp. Other changes include:

On special-delivery matter the present rate of 13 cents up to two pounds on first-class mail will be raised to 15 cents, while the special delivery fee on first-class matter will be advanced from 25 cents for over ten pounds for 35 cents. On fourth-class matter the rate will be increased from 35 to 45 cents for special-delivery matter weighing over ten pounds.

State Flower Series Proposed

A New Jersey philatelist, Herman Hesse, of Clifton, has advanced a proposal for the issuance of a State Flower Stamp series.

To date relatively few stamps have been issued by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to commemorate Statehood. This current proposal, more democratic in its aspects, would afford equal recognition to each of the States.

Bearing as a motif the adopted flower of each State, the stamps would be issued in popular 3c denomination, at alphabetical intervals, and placed on sale initially in post offices of the State for which they were designated.

In addition to serving the established purposes and interests, the series would constitute an educational factor in States' hereditary and environmental factors, and would assist in fostering a world-wide appreciation of Statehood, the most peculiarly American part of our governmental structure.

The bower would provide the symbolic dedication to unified peace.

Reports from a majority of States' officials indicate that the proposal has wide interest and some very definite backing. The individual States feel that it would provide a very stimulating public relations measure on an equal-level basis, and would step over some of the partiality now in evidence in commemorative Statehood issues.

IT SEEMS TO ME

Norway Catalog

It seems to me that we should repeat remarks made about the Norway Postage Stamp catalog, published in English.

The translator (R. King-Jarlow) has done a job that grows on the user. A recurrent use needed for correction of the present known listing in our catalog, shows that only innovations and unusual tabulations are included, but the text is direct, sure and full coverage of points that have been very doubtful to collectors who do not read Norwegian.

One user called attention to a single short sentence that may be ambiguous.

Speaking of the stamps that were overprinted "V" in August, 1941, it reads "V" stamps with watermark . . . overprinted in black "V by Emil Moestue A/S. paper, F. (wmk No. 1) sideways, and added in italics "N. B. Fugitive in benzine."

The F paper is made by Hamang Papirfabrik A/S, and the watermark is the double lined post horn, sideways.

We have on this side discarded the "benzine" detecting fluid almost entirely for the carbon fluid, or Carbona — both being non-inflammable. But the warning does not say whether it is the watermark that will soak out, or the black "V" surcharge that will soak off. And while this you can find out maybe, you wouldn' want to sacrifice a stamp to find out. Anyhow, while it mentions a forgery of the overprint, it is on only two values. Naturally, too, the expensive one (50 ore brown-lilac) is one item. The "V" being slightly higher and narrower than the genuine.

That is the only place anyone can raise an eyebrow at. If you collect Norway you cannot afford to go without this booklet of some 64 pages.

Trend of the Times

Various questions as to the resumption of trade interest abroad seems to point to two things. Spain is more active in printed publications than formerly, and German dealers are almost unrepresented, which is natural. Beside this there seems still to be a hesitancy in the mails, and delays on west bound second-class matter that is very annoying. Great Britain's dealers and publications carry on about as usual.

On the Western continent, there is a great reduction in the printed matter, and some of the formerly heavy mailers are absent. This may be paper shortage, or it may be political unrest, or both.

Mexican and the Isthmus countries are almost non-evident and what gets through to the collector reader, or the small dealer is pretty scant and non-informative.

Designs

Speaking of stamp designs —many approvals of the Austrian "Flower group" and the extending of the "Costume Austrians". And while perhaps some criticise the flowers as "overdone" they are surely non-political. Similarly the costumes will and do preserve the fast disappearing folk and sectional dresses, as do those of other European areas. They are well worth preserving—even if you do not collect the countries they represent. History, race and locality dress of the types that intrigue us.

The Conestoga

Never mind whether the Swedish ox drawn wagon (almost spelled it as one Britisher did "waggon", which is correct there) is Conestoga, or some place near. It is still known by other names and is and was standard for cross continental trips, but someone ought to make all the pictures alike—the wagons were "all, alike" even if we disagree about where the driver — whip hand — goad user, was placed. Pictures exist showing him seated side saddle on the foot board behind the wheel oxen.

The wagon being historic—why not make it so by agreeing on design. This man claimed he drove such a team in 1867 from Chicago to mid-Kansas, and now lives there.

NUMISMATIC THOUGHTS

By FRANK C. ROSS

A Legend Debunked

"That out of mere ambition you have caused your holy hat to be stamped on the king's coin.—SHAKESPEARE.

And the quote of Shakespeare, repeated through the years, is, more than anything else, responsible for the legend that Cardinal Wolsey lost favour because of his audacity in placing his holy hat on the king's coins. Numismatics claims this legend as one of its own, and the Wolsey Hat coins are in demand, as are all other coins with a specially interesting legend or story behind them. Now, however, it is being claimed that Shakespeare was using his poet's license, and that his quote was more poetical than factual. In a paper read before the Royal Society of New Zealand by W. D. Ferguson, the following excerpt appears:—

The York coinage of this issue includes a groat, the only one existing from an ecclesiastical mint. The obverse is like the London groats and the reverse has CIVITAS EBORACI with T. W. at the sides and the Cardinal's hat below the shield on the reverse. This coin is of great historical interest as it was made the basis of one of the charges against Wolsey after his fall from favour. Contrary to what has often been written from the time of Shakespeare onwards, the charge was not for having struck coins or for putting the Cardinal's hat below the shield on the redone, but for coining a groat at his mint for which he had no authority. Ruding says that the article of accusation concerned was so worded that it might seem that the offence was in placing the hat on his groats; but it appears that the fault was in striking, without authority, larger coins than those of his predecessors and marking them as his own with the Cardinal's hat design. Ruding says that this could not be found to be an offence against any existing law and that the charge was dropped. But Brooke says that by issuing a coin of this denomination Wolsey usurped the king's prerogative, and this was recorded in articles of accusation which only failed to mature owing to Wolsey's death. Probably both authorities are correct, as the House of Commons threw out a Bill of Attainer against Wolsey in 1529.

Pepper Coin

"So valuable was pepper in the middle ages, men's wealth was measured by their pepper supply. Millionaires were called "Pepper-Sacks" instead of old money-bags."—ROBERT PILGRIM.

Botanically it is pepper-corn, numismatically it is pepper-coin. Botanically a pepper-corn is the dried berry of the black pepper, hence a mere trifle. Under the pepper-corn rent law of the Middle Ages a certain amount of pepper-corns, usually a pound, was paid at stated intervals as rentals. Now, however, any nominal rent in kind operating to keep alive the contract, much as the now prevalent payment of "one dollar and other considerations" is used. Precedented by the Middle Age law of pepper corn rent payments, it seems the later use of pepper corn token payments was confined mostly to rents. Benjamin Franklin and his wife Deborah leased a house to Mrs. Franklin's mother for as long as she may live at an annual rental of one pepper-corn. New York City in 1733 leased the land known as Bowling Green for eleven years at an annual rental of one pepper-corn. A news item of Sept. 15th, 1948 says: The University of Illinois leases an acre of rich Illinois farm land at a rental of three pepper corns per year. The 99 year lease was made in 1868. The three pepper corns mentioned in the lease, which terminates if the school is closed, correspond to similar $1 a year leases of today. So far as known the university has never collected the prescribed rent. Pepper-corn token rentals were used quite frequently in the early days of our history, not chosen haphazardly, but as a descendant of the pepper-corn rent law of the Middle Ages. Superseded by the "$1 a year" the pepper-corn has become obsoleted rentally, but numismatically it is a much alive pepper-coin.

Problems

The make-up of a coin doesn't just happen that way; it is the sum-total of many problems entering into it. In choosing the denominations for our currency, the problem of convenience must be solved; the size of coin must be problemed; the designs, and the alloys must be chosen with great care. We now learn that the 1943 Lincoln head steel pennies to conserve copper for war purposes was not a spontaneous, on-the-spur-of-the-moment decision; many problems were solved before its selection. Even a new denomination, a Franklin three-center, was under consideration. The Chicago Daily Tribune, Sept. 13th, says: — Nellie Tayloe Ross, director of the mint, disclosed recently that during the war the government was considering a new three cent coin bearing the likeness of Ben Franklin. The coin was proposed to ease the drain on copper, which was in short supply, but the idea was abandoned in favor of steel coated white pennies.

From a sentimental, as well as a

ROSS' ANNUAL ODE

Merry Christmas, Pearl Ann Reeder, and a Happy New Year, too,
The same to all the jolly members that make up your HOBBIES crew,
With the hope that good old Santa will unload in front your door
All of the things you've yearned for — and then add aplenty more.
If Santa keeps an honor roll of those to be specially blest,
I know that you, of that chosen few, will high-top all of the rest.

You are patient with, and an assistance to others less endowed,
Not a reproach, not a cross word, (at least not said aloud);
Your optimistic outlook, your ever encouraging smile,
Keep the staff up and doing, feeling their efforts worth the while.
It is almost inconceivable — it's almost beyond belief
The confidence the staff has in its patient, able chief.

Your name, seldom appears in print — you have modesty to spare,
But between the lines and behind the scenes you appear everywhere,
Editing here, improving there, HOBBIES go out in beauty,
All because you never pause in your arduous line of duty,
"Here's Howdy," Pearl Ann Reeder, my model little boss,

practical point of view, this was a wise "solve" for it gives our beloved Franklin a twenty five year lease on the fifty-cent piece, instead of a short time tenancy on a temporary three-cent coin. Yes, many problems are solved in the birth of a coin.

—o—

NUMISMATICISMS

Seven-Cent Nickel. A proposed bill in congress calls for the minting of seven-cent pieces. The purpose is to use it as a weapon against the high cost of living. It may be presumed they expect the dealers to sell a dime article for 7 cents and a nickel article two for 7 cents, but human nature as it is, wouldn't the dealer raise his five-cent article to seven cents, and his seven-cent article to a dime? It is an ill blizzard that blows nobody good skating; even if the seven-cent piece doesn't down the high cost of living, it will give collectors another coin to play with.

Page Ben Franklin. Spending pays better interest than saving. In London a man died in 1913 and left 1000 pounds. The heirs put the sum out at interest. A financial wizzard now figures out, so the news item says, that in 1947 the capital and interest will buy less in goods and service than the original sum; that it would have been more profitable to have bought foreign stamps or diamond rings with the money.

Medicina In Nummis. The number of medical coins, tokens and medals are estimated at around 12,500, and they cover the entire medical profession from ancient to modern times. There are several large collections, practically all formed by doctors, and many books written on the subject, these, too, practically all by members of the medical fraternity. Doctors take to these medals like numismatists do to coins.

A Swine-Penny has nothing to do with the purchase of bacon. It is a nick-name in England for coins rooted up by swine.

Lincoln Five Dollar Bill was a traveler's guide. An AP news item from Washington City says:—Mario Pasquetto, Italian tenor, speaks no English. On his way to a concert rehearsal he got lost from his interpreter He pulled out a $5 bill, pointed to the picture on the back of it, and wound up where he wanted to go. It was the Lincoln Memorial, and nearby was his concert site on the banks of the Potomac river.

He Got Even. On one of the series of $10 notes of 1880, the eagle, when turned upside down, is the perfect image of a jackass. So perfect is the jackass it can hardly be attributed as an accident; it must have been intentional, but not on the part of the government. It is claimed that the engraver, getting a tip he was to be dismissed, and to get even for his dismissal, deliberately and with malice aforethought, produced this eagle-jackass design. The deception passing the rigid censorship of the revengeful engraver may have gotten even with the Bureau of Engraving, but in so doing he gave numismatics a prize item.

Ebony Hued. For two or three hundred years following the twelfth century in England debased silver money was known as Black Money. The over-dose of base alloy gave the coins a decidedly brunette appearance. It may be possible that this term "black" in black money is the progenitor of "black" in black-mail, black-Friday, and black-market.

Hirsute Tax Tokens. To modernize and Europe-ize Russia, Peter the Great of Russia decreed that the men should discard their beards, and to make his decree effective he placed a tax on beards. Those who retained their beards paid the tax and received a token in return as a receipt. These tokens are known to coin collectors as Beard money, but the Russians have a name for them, Borodovayas.

Mint Marks. At one time in France the name of the Mint of issue was indicated by placing a dot under a letter in an inscription on coin that corresponded with the first letter of the name of the mint. For instance, if we adopted the system, a dot would appear under P in pluribus for Philadelphia mint, under S in States for San Francisco, and under D in United for Denver. Quite unique, but rather far-fetched.

Spondulix is a very common synonym for money, but unlike most nicknames, spondulix, so far as I can find, has defied all attempts to be greatly appreciated by numismatical etymologists.

—o—

WITTY-CIZED WISDOM

By HARRY E. BOSLEY
Kansas City.

Some wives object to coin collecting; widows never do.

Pennies were nest eggs of great fortunes.

The dime is smallest in size but usually largest in denomination found in church collection plates.

The sweetest jingle in the world comes from the coins in your pocket.

Your dollar gets thinner and thinner, and sooner or later may become only a mirage.

"You can't take it with you," so why fret, you can't spend money either place you go.

It takes all kinds of coins to make a world.

You had better have something besides yourself laid up for rainy days.

If money grew on trees some people would still be too lazy to "pick" a livelihood.

Just because coins are round, don't expect them to roll your way without some "push."

Some people make money hand over hand; others by sleight of hand; but most of us by calloused hand.

CHRISTMAS GIFT SUGGESTIONS

Greek To You?

Yet it is one of our best sellers. It is a dandy mounted collection of Greek paper money containing 25 pieces, mounted in order of denomination, from 50 Lepta (½ Drachma) all the way through 100,000,000,000 (100 Billions) Drachma. Contains a good deal of text printed in both Greek and English, explaining the effects of INFLATION. This book contains 36 pages, 8x10", and was made up in Athens, Greece. An unusual gift for the numismatist, historian, or economist. Price $5.00, or three collections, only $11.75.

Ancient Newspapers

Pre- and Post-Revolutionary newspapers printed in England from about 1770 to 1790. Contain very interesting accounts of daily experiences in England, America and other parts of the world. All are in very fine condition. Price $2.00 each, or 3 for $5.00.

Order of the German Eagle

We proudly offer one of the RAREST Nazi orders, (military decoration) issued by that regime, namely the Order of the German Eagle. This order was presented to leading foreign diplomats and officials. The Order itself is a beautiful thing to behold. It consists of a white enameled cross with gold swords in saltire. An eagle with spread wings is perched upon a gold swastika with a white enameled background, between each arm of the cross. This is not an ordinary gold plated affair, but the entire medal is gold filled. The medal with ribbon and clasp, in a beautiful red presentation case which has a large gold eagle stamped on it, only $15.00.

New Orleans Broken Bank Notes

A lovely set of beautifully engraved bank notes issued on the Canal Bank. Contains 9 different notes, from $5.00 to $1,000.00. The engraving on these notes must be seen to be appreciated. We have seen this identical set sell for twice the figure we are asking for it. Our low price is only $6.00 for this lovely set of uncirculated notes, and to boot we will house each note in a special currency holder!

Salisbury, Maryland

Set of four lovely, crisp bank notes in denomination of $1, $2, $3, $5 notes, dated 1862. Beautiful workmanship depicting life in early Maryland. Backs are also highly engraved. This set is easily worth $3.00 in this condition, yet we can sell it (including holders) for only $2.50.

Similar to above set, also with four notes, in Crisp condition; but they don't have engraved reverses. Set with holders $1.50.

Trick sent in by a reader. Place two tumblers about three inches apart. Bridge the gap between the tumblers using a paper dollar to make a support strong enough to sustain a third tumbler. The trick can be done with a new crisp bill folded into numerous accordion pleats running lengthwise.

It pays to advertise. A George I, 1723 crown carries the letters SS and C, initials of the South Sea Company, advertisting the fact that that concern furnished the silver that went into the coin.—F. C. R.

Money of Yesteryear

By CHARLES FRENCH

During the Civil War, we had quite a shortage of coins in circulation. Most likely this was caused by hoarding and an increased volume of business due to the war. This shortage caused a good deal of hardship for it was very difficult to secure change when making a purchase.

The natural substitute for the shortage of coins was to resort to the use of postage stamps when making change. This was not a very practical solution for with any kind of use, the gum became moist and the stamps would stick together.

In order to eliminate this fault, several enterprising people devised the system of encasing the stamps in small metal containers, with a mica or ising glass covering to see the stamp. This turned out to be fairly practical in a small way, but fell far short of the requirement of the times.

In those days there were no laws prohibiting the private coinage of coins and the shortage encouraged thousands of merchants to purchase the now famous Civil War Tokens having their business and name placed upon the pieces. These tokens served a double purpose, they helped meet the coinage shortage, and served as an excellent means of advertising.

Finally, the government was forced to step in and aid the situation. They did this by issuing the first "postal currency", known today as the first issue Fractional currency. These notes were designed to eliminate the use of postage stamps as change, and to show they were of the same value, replicas of the postage stamps were imprinted on the notes. The next four fractional currency issues were not issued by the post office department but by the Treasury Department. This new system of paper money change was very popular and eased the shortages tremendously. In fact these interesing notes were issued until as late as 1876, over ten years after the end of the Civil War.

Chinese Coins Exhibited in Florida Exhibition

According to reieases furnished this department by Johnny Flood, Jacksonville, Fla., district secretary of the American Numismatic Association for Florida, enthusiasm of the coin collectors in the state is running high.

One of the highlights of a recent meeting in Jacksonville was a display of the collection of 859 pieces of Chinese money, mostly coins belonging to Colonel Chester R. Allen. an alumnus and former football player of the University of Florida.

The collection was assembled by Colonel Allen during three years of service in China, from 1937 to 1940, and largely came from the areas around Shanghai and Peking. A few of the coins were obtained near the Great Wall. This collection is on loan to the Florida State Museum, for an indefinite period.

Commemorating a number of Emperors and the last Empress Dowager, nearly all of the pieces were issued by governments of pre-republican China, one piece having been secured through a princess of the latter's court.

One set of coins dates back to 1100 B. C. and a piece of paper money was issued during the Ming Dynasty about 1300 B. C.

In the transitory period between the bartering age and the coin age, many different shaped pieces of metal, resembling various utensils in use at that time, were put on the market, according to authorities. Some of these resemble the early jade music-like instruments called chin. Chins were used in orchestras like the modern triangles.

Included in this group are also bell-shaped charm coins, fish coins slotted metal block coins, and jade Pu (spade) coins, said to have been used by the nobility for transactions.

Believed to be the oldest mediums of exchange in the evolution of the coinage system, the "Pei" dates back to 2255 B. C.

CHRISTMAS TRADITIONS OF FRANCE

To the collectors of Christmas lore, we believe the quaint bygone Yuletide customs of France will be found as charming as any of those formerly observed in other countries.

We learn that for the French, Christmas began with the Feast of Saint Barbara on December 4. On Saint Barbara's day, plates were filled with wheat or lentils, which were set afloat in water, and then placed in the warm ashes of the fireplace or on a sunny window ledge to germinate. As Saint Barbara's grain grew well or ill so it was believed the harvest of the coming year would be good or bad. This green growing grain was also on the table when the Great Supper was served on Christmas Eve —the feast of the Winter Solstice—a symbol of the harvest of the new year that then began.

Another belief was that the twelve days immediately preceding Christmas were foretellers of the weather for the new twelve months to come; each in its turn, by rain or sunshine or by heat or cold, showing the character of the correspondingly numbered month of the new year.

If the family was fortunate enough to live in the country, they all took part in bringing home the cacho-fio, or yule-log. The head of the faimly—the grandfather, the father, or the eldest son — must cut the tree; all the others must share in carrying home the log that was to make the Christmas fire. And it should be a fruit-bearing tree, preferably the olive or the almond. The olive is especially sacred for there was a belief that lightning never strikes it. When the tree was brought down, the cacho-fio was cut—about five feet long if possible—so that it would be big enough to burn from Christmas Eve until the evening of the New Year's Day. It was not expected that the log should burn continuously, for each night it was smothered in ashes and was not set a-blazing again until the following evening. The laying of the yule log was a ceremony and religious rite; it was the rule that nominal bearers of the log to the hearth should be the oldest and youngest of the family—the one personifying the year that is dying, the other the year new-born.

In ancient times the Christmas bird was a goose, who was roasted and eaten in honor of her ancestral good deeds. The legend is that, when the Kings (the Magi), led by the star, arrived at the stable in Bethlehem, it was the goose alone of all the animals assembled there, who came forward politely with her greeting; yet failed to express clearly her good intentions because she had caught a cold in the chill and windy weather, and her voice was creaky and harsh. The same voice has ever since remained with her and, as a commemoration of her hospitable and courteous conduct, it became the custom to cook her piously on Christmas Day.

Another record tells us of a Christmas roast served occasionally in medieval times. This was a huge cock, stuffed with chicken livers and sausage-meat and garnished with twelve roasted partridges, thirty eggs and thirty truffles: the whole an allegory in which the cock represented the year, the partridges the months, the eggs the days, and the truffles the nights. This, however, was not a common dish and it was not until the turkey appeared that the goose was rescued from her annual martyrdom. In France, the date of the coming of the turkey is uncertain. Tradition states that the crusaders brought him from the Indies. Some believe he arrived in Europe from America about thirty years after the Columbus voyage of discovery.—I. G.

BOOK FORUM

Letter From Fore-edge Artist

I read with interest your article in the August HOBBIES on fore-edge painting, and having delved into this work to some extent, would like to call your attention to the fact that Samuel Mearne, appointed Royal Bookbinder to Charles II, at a salary of six pounds a year, 1660, was the first man to do fore-edge painting. The earliest specimen found was on a book from his bindery, and many of his books were fore-edge painted. At his death, the work became a lost art, to be taken up a hundred years or so later by John Edwards of Halifax, England.

After writing to several of the largest libraries here and abroad, for data as to how this work was done, and getting no information from any source, I experimented for about eight months, with the result that some 25 books fore-edge painted by me were exhibited in the Boston Public Library, the Boston Book Fairs, and various other places. These were all done for private use, and not for sale. Technicolored photos have been taken on some of them. Most of my subjects relate to the contents of the book (old finely bound copies preferred, with great care as to choice of laid paper) but I prefer to paint marine scenes such as square riggers, as the proportionate length of the book to width makes good composition.

INDIAN LORE: ANCIENT AND OTHERWISE

By WILSON STRALEY

Through the years there has been much speculation on the question "When did the Indians acquire the horse?" It is a hard question to answer; nevertheless "Back in the Saddle," a magazine published for horse lovers (by R. C. Davis at Cisco, Texas) carries a story in the October number, "The Horse and the Indian," written and illustrated by Randy Steffen, which gives much information anent the proposition, especially among the Plains tribes.

An archaeological survey is being made of Missouri under the auspices of the Missouri Archaeological society, in which the various local societies and collectors of Indian relics are co-operating in a handsome manner. Of the 144 counties in the state, surveys are under way in 40 or more, says a recent Missouri Archaeological society News-letter. Volunteer parties to date have supplied much needed material toward the reconstruction of prehistory of the state—this includes maps and sketches of occupation sites, photos and drawings of artifacts secured, as well as the gift of the actual specimens themselves.

Our thanks to Mr. Lee F. Harkins, Oklahoma, (Chickasaw-Choctaw) for a cachet and first-day mailing of matter bearing the Indian commemorative stamp from Muskogee, October 14-15, at which city an American Indian Arts and Crafts Exposition was held during the occasion of mailing out the first day covers of the anniversary, the event drawing large and appreciative crowds both days. We take the liberty to quote from his note: * * * I took my Indian collection of books, letters, the official Choctaw seal, and other items to display at the Indian centennial. I was in the parade, listed among the prominent Five Civilized Tribes of Indians. You will note I was supervisor of the museum exhibits. Meeting some of my old relatives and school mates was thrilling." Mr. Harkins was kind enough to mail us a copy of the official program to place in our private library of Indian lore.

According to a story by Hal Nelson in a recent issue of the Kansas City (Mo.) Times, Mrs. Margaret Pearson Speelman, Dean of Women at Haskell Institute, the Indian school at Lawrence, Kansas, has retired after thirty years in the Indian service — the first fourteen years teaching in the Indian school at Chilocco, Oklahoma, and the remaining years at the Haskell Institute. The outstanding trait of Mrs. Speelman was her knack of handling the children in her classes, instilling in them a thirst for knowledge and a desire to learn, together with her accomplishment as a playwright and the presentation of pageants depicting the legends of the various tribes, not only writing the script but the music score as well, then superintending the rehearsals and final presentation. "The pageants," says Mr. Nelson, "are always true interpretations of famous Indian legends. The cast is selected from members of the tribe by Mrs. Speelman. Little difficulty is encountered in persuading the Indians to act, she says, because tradition and legend are an important part of their heritage." In these productions all tribes co-operate. "The good influence of intertribal relations erases all cultural differences," Mrs. Speelman explains. "When the tom-toms start even the little children know to which tribe the rhythm belongs." Mr. Nelson further says: "Each tribe teaches his own culture to the others. They give their songs and dances as gifts. In learning them, the other Indians consider these culture traits part of their own heritage, whether they are Kiowa, Apache or Navajo." Today at 60 Mrs. Speelman looks back on thirty years in which she has helped to bridge the gap that has widened between the primitive and modern culture. She is an honorary daughter of the Comanche tribe. Mrs. Speelman not only found time to teach during the the thirty years in the Indian service, but to study and secure both the Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts degrees from the University of Kansas.

In conclusion: We are informed that Mrs. Margot Astrov, a teacher in the Canyoncito Day School, Correo, New Mexico (Navaho), who has been handling the distribution of relief bundles sent to the Indians, is making an effort to supply the Indian children with toys and picture books. In a letter she states: "However, I have another request; and I feel a real beggar on behalf of my people (the Navaho). My school children, most of them are beginners, are very much in need of toys and picture-books. Anything that has wheel and rolls after a fashion makes the children especially happy." The Missouri Archaeological Society, of which Mrs. Astrov is a member, adds to her appeal: "If you have toys or children's books that your children have out-grown or partly wrecked they would be put to good use if sent to Mrs. Astrov for the Navaho children. Many of these children have never possessed a toy of their own.

New Folsom Find

A beautifully made black chert spearhead, which may prove to be a clue to some of the earliest human beings in North America, has been received by the Smithsonian Institution from northwestern Alaska near the headwaters of the Utukok River, a 200-mile-long stream flowing into the Arctic.

This spearhead is one of the most exquisitely chipped examples yet found of the so-called Folsom points which, in Colorado and the Southwest, frequently are associated with the fossilized bones of long-extinct animals of the closing days of the last ice age. They are considered incontrovertible evidence that man was on this continent during the fairly rapid retreat of the ice, at least 10,000 years ago. These are among the earliest known human artifacts in the New World. They are fairly widely scattered over the continent, but not very much is known about them.

The Alaskan find by Raymond M. Thompson of the U. S. Geological Survey is of exceptional significance. The makers of the Folsom points are unknown. No human remains have ever been found associated with the spearheads. But it is now almost universally accepted by anthropologists that this continent was peopled by migrations from northern Asia. It can reasonably be assumed that the Folsom point makers were not essentially different from the ancestors of the American Indians. There may, in fact, have been a direct line of descent.

The problem of their road through the ice-covered north to the interior of the continent has remained highly speculative and controversial. It is known, however, that during the closing days of the Pleistocene there was a relatively ice-free corridor just east of the Rockies, extending from the Arctic to the southern end of the ice-sheet. It could have been traversed presumably over a period of generations, by small groups of nomads.

The Utukok region was along a route leading to the northern end of this corridor. The spearhead may well have been dropped on the threshhold as man entered the New World.

Today this country southwest of Point Barrow is a forbidding region, but the general topography, presumably little changed in ten millenniums, lends support to the thesis that it may have been the start of the migration route. It is traversed by high east-west ridges which lead from the coast to the interior rivers. These ridges would have provided pathways for primitive man across northern Alaska to the streams along which he could move southward into the interior of what is now Canada and the United States.

There were many other traces of human occupancy in the region. Altogether Mr. Thompson located 17 archaeological sites, but they apparently were those of Eskimo, occupied during late pre-Columbian or early historic times.

Thule Artifacts

A prehistoric, partly subterranean Eskimo village in which were artifacts of two ancient cultures was excavated this summer by Dr. Henry B. Collins, Jr., Smithsonian Institution archeologist, on the desolate shores of Frobisher Bay, Baffin Island, in the Canadian Arctic.

The villages consisted of one-room houses with walls of stone and whale bones, and with whale bone roofs. These dwellings were erected in excavations two to three feet deep in the permanently frozen soil, with the roofs above the surface. They were entered by subterranean passageways. Through the long Arctic winter the ancient inhabitants must have lived completely buried under the drifting snow.

The artifacts—arrow points, harpoon heads, skin scrapers, and other types were made of stone, ivory, bone, and antlers. By far the greatest number were large, somewhat crudely fashioned implements which are characteristic of the so-called "Thule" culture. This, with some variations from place to place, is the prehistoric Eskimo culture ancestral to the modern in much of Greenland, the Canadian Arctic, and Alaska. The Thule culture originated in Alaska and spread eastward along the Arctic coasts, probably around 800 years ago. Many of the Thule artifacts found by Dr. Collins at Frobisher Bay are practically identical with those of the same period in Alaska, indicating that the migration could not have taken very long, possibly no more than one generation.

But mixed with and underlying these Thule artifacts at Frobisher Bay were a considerable number of small, very delicately carved implements which belong to the mysterious Dorset culture. The makers of these artifacts had preceded the Thule people and had occupied the Frobisher Bay site before the arrival of the latter. Dorset handicraft shows some resemblance to the oldest Eskimo artifacts found in Alaska—presumably the work of some of the earliest migrants of this stock from Siberia, their probable homeland.

There is no means of dating with any precision the Thule village on Baffin Island. It is certain, however, that it preceded the voyage of Martin Frobisher late in the sixteenth century. At that time the explorer found the Baffin Island Eskimo already using iron. No trace of metal was found in the old village.

THE HOBBY OF LOUIS XI OF FRANCE

" . . . He had raised to the highest rank both in state and church the son of a cobbler, or, according to others, of a tailor, one John de Balue, born in 1421, at the market town of Angles, in Poitou. After having chosen him, as an intelligent and a clever young priest, for his secretary and almoner, Louis made him successively clerical councellor in the parliament of Paris, then bishop of Evreux, and afterwards, cardinal; and he employed him in his most private affairs. It was a hobby of his thus to make the fortunes of men born in the lowest stations, hoping that since they would owe everything to him, they would never depend on any but him. It is scarcely credible that so keen and contemptuous a judge of human nature could have reckoned on dependence as a pledge of fidelity. And in this case Louis was, at any rate, mistaken; . . ."

The Engineering Mind of Abraham Lincoln

The Illinois Tech Engineer published by the Illinois Institute of Technology, Chicago, in its December, 1946, issue published an article of special interest to Lincolniana students, and incidentally of more than passing interest to the collector of data pertaining to mechanical antiques.

The article, by Earl C. Kubicek, executive secretary of the Alumni Association of the Institute describes a wagon model made by Abraham Lincoln about 1840. The model is now displayed in the Lincoln Museum, formerly the Ford Theatre in Washington, D. C. We quote from Mr. Kubicek's findings:

"On the model made by Abraham Lincoln, which is in the Lincoln Museum in the Ford Theatre, Washington, one of the steering arms was broken, and this condition existed as long as I have known of the existence of that model. It was broken at the time that Osborn H. Oldroyd recovered it from the Patent Office. Some years ago, when the Patent Office became too crowded, many thousands of models of different sorts were gotten rid of, but Colonel Oldroyd fortunately obtained the original at that time.'

"Col. Oldroyd and Carl W. Schaefer made a patient search of the patent applications as on file but were unable to find if an application were ever filed by Lincoln, with the Patent Office, for his wagon model. The model is of much interest, inasmuch as it is a forerunner of the modern automobile construction embodying a method of turning the front wheels as an independent system.

"This particular Lincoln item, along with many others of the Oldroyd Collection, became the property of the Federal Government through purchase in 1926."

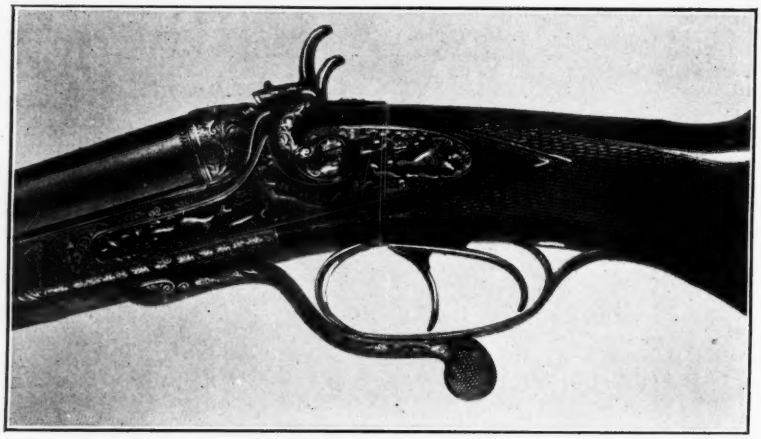
FIREARMS



J. NOWOTNY—PRAGUE MAKER

By HARRY WANDRUS

A survey of the varied products of this relatively unknown maker would cause one at first to wonder whether he was truly a craftsman or a dealer. Such weapons as air guns, revolvers, shotguns, rifles, double rifles and the like have been found bearing his name. One specimen in particular would almost tend to lend weight to the dealer theory or to the idea that he was perhaps a production worker or factory owner. This piece is a muzzle-loading rifle with definite military characteristics such as bayonet, iron ramrod, year number on trigger guard, and only a small stamping "Nowotny" on the tang. Two specimens are known, that in the author's collection and that listed in Bannerman's catalog (1). I had at first considered these one and the same but later noticed that definite caliber differences existed. While mine had been re-rifled it was but .50 caliber while that in the Bannerman collection was .58. Other dimensions for the two held the same and are an overall length of 45 inches, barrel length of 29 inches, a weight of 7½ pounds with checkered stock (and cheek piece) and brazed-on bayonet stud.

The most elaborate specimen found to date is that located in the Real Armeria in Madrid. This double-barreled rifle or shotgun with Damascus barrels and gold trimmings is inscribed J. Nowotny Fabrique Pour Manual Arenas Madrid, sort of an international inscription in Czech., French and Spanish. This piece is center fire, blued and .016 caliber (2). Inasmuch as Stockel (3) lists Nowotny as living in Prague after 1860 and this piece is center fire it was probably made while he lived in that city.

A beautifully engraved, chased and gold decorated specimen in the author's collection is a combination rifle and shotgun chambered for an unusually large size .44 caliber, center fire cartridge (Fig. 1) and an exceptionally long 16 gauge.

This piece was obviously custom-made and represents an exceptionally high grade of workmanship both as to finish and ornamentation. At first glance the barrels appear to be of the same diameter and only upon looking at the muzzle ends does one perceive the distinct size difference, the illusion being achieved by proper placement of barrels and top band. Overall length of the piece is 43 inches, barrel length (one damascus steel) is 26¾ inches, it is center fire and inscribed simply on the barrels. J. Nowotny A Prague, this spelling of the city and preposition being French. Perhaps it was made for a Frenchman! The barrels are stamped underneath with various Austrian proof marks and with the exception of the barrels which are browned, every exposed piece of metal bears engraving, gold inlays or chased work (Fig. 2). (It might be mentioned that into the lockplates is engraved J. Nowotny V Praze, being the correct Czech spelling.) I, personally, feel that Nowotny's work, though apparently not known to vast numbers of people, did get around, and such arms as those made for the Spanish Senor and my specimen with its French spelling represent custom work for those who could afford the best.) Gold work abounds all about the breech mechanism and is worked into a monogram, this being the letter I over K.

We also find listed in the Real Armeria a revolver of six shots, center fire, blued, trimmed with gold and inscribed in same with J. Nowotny V Praze Pour Manuel Arenas Madrid. The caliber is .010, the grips of ivory.

Nowotny is known to have made percussion rifles, some elaborately inlaid with gold and with chased lockplates although these as well as a one piece spring air-gun are marked as being made in Leitmeritz or Litomerice, a city in northern Bohemia, northwest of Prague. Little seems to be known of this Czech maker other than what can be inferred from available specimens, that he lived in Litomerice in about 1840 and in Prague in about the period 1860-1900.

(1) p. 25 FRANCIS BANNERMAN CATALOG JAN. 1940.

(2) The caliber system being used is not known; it doesn't make sense using either the English or metric system. The Nowotny shotgun rifle combination is marked 58,50, similarly meaningless.

CZECH WORLD WAR ONE HELMET

With the outbreak of the first World War many Czechs scattered about the world in small colonies, entered the Allied ranks to fight Austria-Hungary and her allies. In 1914 a Czech Brigade was formed in Russia from Allied prisoners of war and by 1915 some of these forces shipped to France had taken part in engagements on the Western Front. Organized under French officers and adopting French army uniforms and discipline these forces of several thousand took part in various actions first as units and finally by 1917 as a Czechoslovak Army recognized by the Allies with its own flag and officers but subject to the orders of the Supreme Commander.

The helmet shown is one which was worn by a member of this first Czech army in France. Not having a helmet design or uniform of its own this army necessarily had to use the equipment of its allies, a practice quite common and one used even in the Second World War, when, for example, French detachments with the Allied Forces wore British and American uniforms, helmets, etc.

This helmet is of conventional French design and differs only in having a different, distinct insignia on the forehead portion. The largest figure of this design is the Lion of Bohemia, that immediately above and slightly small is the silver cross of Slovakia. Two smaller insignia are to be found, one on each side of the two larger and while these are rather indistinct it is presumed that these represent two of the other provinces of Czechoslovakia, Silesia and Moravia. The fact that Ruthenia, the fifth province, and having as its coat-of-arms, the bear, is not indicated would date this piece as not later than 1918 inasmuch as the idea of incorporating this province in the country had not yet been considered. While it is mere presumption to assume that this helmet was not in use before 1917, because a Czech army was not yet in existence before that time, it does seem a sensible conclusion.

Trek of Old Timers

With a proud disdain for modern lines, 65 ancient cars recently passed through Chicago carrying their trusting drivers to the Wisconsin Centennial Exposition at Milwaukee.

The tour was sponsored by the Michigan region of the Veteran Motor Car club. Most of the cars left in a group from Flint, Mich.

The motor caravan was met near Whiting, Ind., by D. Cameron Peck, Chicago business man, who drove a 1910 Peerless roadster. Peck, who has turned his enthusiasm for old cars into a hobby, has his own collection of 150 models. Among his prize vehicles is a 1888 De Dion Bouton steamer, a French car which is one of the earliest commercial autos.

Paul L. Kelsey of Albert Lea, Minn., drove the grand-daddy vehicle of the procession—a 1899 Mobile steamer. The buggy-like car carries its own reserve of soft water and white gasoline.

Period Miniature Furnishings In Doll House

By EILEEN MILES

Seven year old Nancy Alberg, a grandaughter of Mrs. Lux is shown with furnishings from the bedroom of the doll house. The New England blanket chest has the original porcelain knobs. The miniature bedside lamp holds enough oil in the tiny cup to burn 20 minutes. The Tuxedo framed picture was purchased with a number of miniature oil paintings from the collection of a Chicago millionaire.

The attic of the doll house really smells like an attic, with ancient wood and dust odors combined with herbs hung from the rafters. Feather stitched velvet comfortables, an ancient hatbox, an old walnut dresser, a pair of drop seat underwear, old boots and shoes, and all the discards of a household are here. The girl is Betty Brown, a friend.

If you are six or sixty, the Lux Memory Doll House by Eileen Miles, will appeal. If you're six, you'll love all the rooms and household things suitable for a dolly a foot high. If you're 60, you'll love the nostalgia of seeing all the things like mamma used to have, from attic castoffs to a cellar filled with miniature Ball jars of fruit and vegetables.

Mrs. Arthur Lux, Minnesota, has collected antiques, great and small for more than 30 years. Then the small began to take preference and when a house, built in quarter scale, was purchased, she found she had furnishings for several rooms. Of course, the collection enlarged considerably and now the house is filled with such beauties as Dresden china, solid silver services, old pewter, in the dining room; a set of tiny Shakespeare bound in ivory and linen; tiny oil paintings; walnut spool beds; warming pans, hooked rugs, iron stoves to heat the rooms or to use for cooking. A doll, purchased in New England and said to be from the Victoria collection, presides at the dining table. A sad iron, with a swan shaped handle belonged to the wife of President Garfield, and a waffle iron on the kitchen range came from a descendant of Benjamin Franklin. A newspaper about the size of two matchfolders, but legibly printed, is spread under the stand holding Poll Parrot in the "daily parlor." In the front parlor is a horsehair sofa and a square piano, with the manufacturer's name, Isely, printed clearly across the front. This piano, whose keys really tinkle, and the black base burner that grandma gave a coat of stove polish every fall, were salesmen's samples from the packs of yesterday's "drummer" who took orders from a miniature model. The base burner has "Little Pet" imprinted in its fat iron front. The kitchen range, complete with lid lifter, reservoir, and wood box, is also a miniature of the real thing used to sell to housewives in remote areas.

In the bedroom, a doll's corset, real whalebone with long tie strings, lies discarded on the bed quilt that is pieced in the bold American Eagle pattern. The dresser scarves, towels by the wash basin, and other linens are decorated in tiny tatting and petitpoint.

Mrs. Lux was invited to show her doll house at the Minnesota fair last year, and was surprised that several thousand people were glad to pay thirty cents to see it. The rooms are viewed from outside, through the windows which gives the interior a realness. Many gray haired customers say, "Remember how grandma used to put her hand in an oven just like that to test the heat for lightbread? "Their husbands say "That woodbox makes me want to sneak off and try to get out of filling it again."

Perhaps the oldest thing in the collection is a hat box more than 150 years old, although a hump-back trunk in the attic, complete with a till and a bonnet compartment in the lid, is close to that.

This is probably one of the most complete collections of household miniatures in the country for those who have said, "We have tried to tell the children how we lived," here is a way to show them. Besides there is the fun one has in collecting them.

HEARD AND SEEN AT THE SHOW

There were just two booths at the Chicago show featuring miniatures. Alice Schiavon supplements her fine line of dolls with a nice line of Minnies, and Atoms of Art hides the activities of Joseph H. Gray.

The crowds were very enthusiastic about the marvelous little things shown at these booths. Sometimes they were four deep trying to get a look at things. And they not only looked, they bought.

Mrs. Helen B. Cook from Joliet, Ill., master worker in wax was a contributer and visitor behind the scenes.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Stiles of Evanston, Ill., lecturers and doll collectors were spellbound at the beauty of the tiny things.

Miss Geraldine Chadwick of Detroit made the trip especially to add to her fine collection of tinies.

We missed the dean of miniature makers, Frederick W. Hosbach, who was kept at home by his wife's ill health. This 84-year old youngster has promised his presence at next year's show.

Mrs. Louis J. Hoone, Springfield, Mass., made herself known at the booths and was quite impressed.

William Seifert of McHenry, Illinois, pioneer of Lily Lake and veteran of the Alaskan gold rush, swapped yarns with your reporter while his wife purchased miniatures.

—o—

Atoms of Art featured two special items. A one thousand dollar miniature silver service and a tiny sink and pump which actually spouted water when handle was operated. Imagine the surprise of the spectators when water began to flow.

Exhibits were made possible by cooperation of Americas finest artists in miniature, including Frederick Hosbach, Frank L. Matter, Mrs. Cook and Roger Wiley.

Tiny smokable pipes by V. H. Freeman caught everyone's eye and the beautiful ivory carvings were enjoyed by all.

Hundreds of other visitors spent much time at these booths but lack of space and the fact that names were not given, makes mention impossible. Watch our smoke next year. The public is truly growing more and more interested in this big hobby of little things.

What's the Use of Collecting Miniature Books

YOU CAN'T READ 'EM.

EXTRACTS from answers to the above question propounded to literary folk here and there.

"I think they are a charming and interesting quest and a very delightful possession, not only for their dainty and skillful format and their rarity, but representing as they do the skilled workmanship of the earlier centuries. Of the many collectors' 'fads' this seems to me to be one of the most pleasurable and sensible."

"For the photographic reduction there is perhaps not very much to be said. True miniatures, however, set up by hand and printed without photographic reduction, illustrate an aspect of human ingenuity and skilled craftsmanship which should interest the genuine amateur in any field.

The surprise and delight shown by almost any educated person, on opening a miniature bookcase filled with its collection of bright and cheerful bindings, are spontaneous and emphatic."—Robert K. Shaw, Worcester, Mass., Public Library. LXIVMOS, 1921 edition.

The Picture POST CARD

By WILLIAM H. RICHARDSON

In my 25 years of collecting post cards, I have come across quite a few freak specimens from various parts of the world.

One is a picture of the old Bailey, London, showing this grand old building with it beautiful marble. In the street below is a picture of horse and buggies, wagons, and on each end of the card is a building, between which are several electric wires. The wires are printed vertical instead of horizontal.

Another freak card shows the burning on Feb. 16, 1877 of the Old Town Hall, Provincetown, Mass. Here we see the Town Hall in the center of the card and just below are several buildings supporting this hall. There is no space between them, and when the printing was done the rolls must have slipped and run one set of buildings into the other.

A card from Beaumont, Tex., shows rice harvesting. On the picture side of the card is the name and address of Miss Durrand, 1709 Dryades St., New Orleands, La. Affixed in the upper right hand corner is a Benjamin Franklin stamp. In the center is a Beaumont postmark, August 10, 1907. On the other side where the address was supposed to be is the following message "Miss Durrand: Hope you and your dear mother are well, your friend, Josie."

In those days, it was not customary for the post office to let such mail be sent thus, but by accident it went through the mail. When I showed this card to a post card collector friend, he said that very few were sent this way. This was the first card that he had seen in his many years in post office service.

In New York City we see the Riverside church with the Grant Tomb and bridge in the background. This picture features everything double, a mistake, in putting it through the printing presses twice.

Old Lafayette Square, which was taken in 1910 in New Orleans, La., carries a Franklin stamp on the picture side of the card where the postmark blots out part of the steeple of the old First Presbysterian Church. It looks as if this post mark were hanging from the church steeple when the card was printed.

I have a card from New York City showing a man holding a "grip" and hanging by his coat-tail from the steeple of Trinity Church in the financial district. On the side of the "grip" is this wording "I have just dropped in to spend my vacation." The card was mailed in 1910. A post card from Humber Valley, N.F.I.D., has a freak postmark. It was stamped at New Orleans, June 24, 1941, and was addressed to Miss Bouna Kayvya, 402 Duplesses Street, New Orleans. It carries a 3c Newfoundland red stamp. On the address side of the card is scratched out and written in the lower left hand corner, "forward to Box 36, Fairhope, Alabama." It is surprising that this went through the United States mail without the postal personel noticing that there was a foreign stamp on the card instead of a green 1c United States stamp.

It appears that this card was addressed overseas but by mistake was not dropped into a mail box until the traveler had returned to the States. The person who was to receive the card had moved and therefore it had to be forwarded making it go through the local post office twice.

A card of the old Jackson House, Portsmouth, N. H., copyrighted by Detroit Publishing Co., shows this old building with it roof touching the ground. The whole side of the building cannot be seen, and it seems as if the picture were taken from the bottom of a hill or when the print was made the house slipped and was covered up by the grass along side of it. This seem to have been done by the paper slipping while it was being printed.

One can go far and wide in search of these little freak cards but there are only a few to be found. Just like a painter if he finds a streak in his work he goes over it until it disappears; a tailor tries to get the stripes in a suit even, etc. It is for this reason when a card dealer prints a freak card he usually takes it out, but sometimes in a busy rush one card might pass his eyes and slip into the pack of several thousand cards going to the market somewhere in the world. Thus it is the collector who detects them and collects them for preservation.

Language of the Flowers

Mrs. Gee had a short notice in the May Post Card Department about her Lover's Lane St. Joe post card. I have one of the set, mine being No. 10. It has all about Woman's World, etc., as hers does, and the following Verse by Field:

"But I'd give it all and gladly
If for an hour or so,
I could feel the grace of a distant place,
Of Lover's Lane St. Joe."

I did have others of this set but don't know what ever became of them. Does any one have cards to a set known as the Language of Flowers? I have one or two to this set with the words spelled in flowers.

In THE CURRENT, 1884, published in Chicago

It is often asked, "What is a peal?" and it seems strange that there should be any difficulty in answering the question. The term is generally applied to any ringing of bells together—no matter of ten minutes' or ten hours' duration. Bells are first raised, either singly or in peal (that is, in ringing order); they may then be set or not, as the ringers please, or rung in changes, or round ringing, or muffled, and then ceased by setting or falling, and then would end a peal in common parlance, and in place where there are only three or four bells, and scientific change-ringing is not known. Such was the meaning in pre-Reformation times, as may be seen by an extract from the Lives of the Berkeleys—a MS. consisting of three volumes, folio, in the possession of the College of Arms.—ELLACOMBE, 1884

ANECDOTE: James Boswell. This cringing but amusing egotistical proser once remarked to his father, Lord Auchinleck, "we men of genius go through the world swimmingly." "And for a good reason," the old judge retorted; "for a very good reason, Jamie; your pockets are in general so light, that there is small risk of your sinking."

Mr. T. Kewan, of Chestnut street, Philadelphia, has just received a new musical toy, made in Germany, which for external elegance and compass, fulness and sweetness of tone, surpasses any of the kind that has hitherto been imported from that land so fruitful in harmonic inventions. It consists of two flat parallel pieces of wood about five inches in length and three in breadth, connected in the manner of bellows by folds of leather. By compression and expansion the air is caused to play upon strips of steel in the interior resembling those of the Aeolina: the sound is transmitted to five holes in the upper board, covered by valves of ebony, which are opened and closed by the fingers;—various notes are thus produced at the pleasure of the player. Each note or key produces also the corresponding harmonies which are emitted simultaneously. In skilful hands this instrument is as captivating to the ear as the most delicate sounds of the double flageolet and violoncello, since to the rudest touch it responds with a succession of accords much resembling the dulcet union of their tone.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. M. Vincent, a lute master at Florence, has invented a violin with eighteen strings and two bows, and has called it the Violin General, because it combines with the tones of the violin, those of contra-vase, the violincello, and the viola.

SCOTIA. The Potteries in the neighborhood of Glasgow, are rather brisk at present. So much has this trade increased in this quarter within these few years, that there are now in active operation eight works, viz. two in the white line; two in the salt glaze line; and four in the brown ware department. During the last nine months, the demand for black teapots in this quarter has been greater than for the four preceding years. The Kingfield pottery (where the kilns are more extensive by a third than any in Scotland, and manufacture 60 dozen of teapots alone in a week) has been uncommonly brisk of late; and yesterday the contents of the kilns had to be hurried out to fulfil immediate orders.

A locomotive ran over a street-car recently in Newark, N. J., and there was loss of life and much bloodshed. The reason why the locomotive ran over the street-car was because there was no viaduct. The conductor and driver of the street-car were arrested. The charge against them will undoubtedly be that they had not built the viaduct. If this can be proved, they should not escape a heavy penalty.

A Congress of German Philologists has been in session four days of this week at Dessau. As is generally held outside of the Fatherland, it would be a wise thing for the Germans to discard their letters and adopt the Roman characters. Perhaps that would stop the rapid deterioration of the sight of German scholars.

An area of Government land was disposed of in Dakota alone last year larger than any one of the following European countries, namely, Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Denmark, Servia, or Greece. A territory the size of Italy was parceled out by the Land Office to individual buyers in different parts of the United States. There is very little left this side of the Rockies on which a crop could be raised. Notice of this ought to be given in Europe.

NATURAL HISTORY

The Drum Mountain Meteorite

A report on the eighth largest meteorite yet found in the United States, a mass of sky iron which weighs 1,164 pounds and whose surface reveals some unusual features, has recently been released by the Smithsonian Institution.

This is the so-called Drum Mountains meteorite from Utah, discovered by chance in 1944 by two Japanese from a nearby relocation center set up for enemy nationals during the war.

These two, Yoshio Nishimoto and Akio Ujihara, were conducting classes in gem cutting for the internees. They were exploring the countryside for materials suitable for classroom demonstration of their art when they came upon a large rock protruding about two feet above the ground, the striking appearance of which attracted their attention. Mr. Nishimoto chipped off a piece and sent it to the Smithsonian. The entire object now has been brought here and subjected to chemical and metallographic examination by E. P. Henderson and S. H. Perry of the Smithsonian staff.

Iron meteorites frequently show broad, shallow depressions on their surfaces, which are popularly known as "Thumb marks." This iron has deeper depressions, unrelated to the so-called thumb marks, which have also been observed on some other iron meteorites. They have been previously explained by weathering or rusting out of some constituent after the meteorite landed on this earth or by the burning out of troilite, a sulfide of iron, during the flight of the mass through the earth's atmosphere. Henderson and Perry offer a new interpretation of these deeper depressions, suggesting that they may have been in existence prior to the time the meteorite entered our atmosphere.

The iron was found resting almost entirely on the surface of the ground. L. B. Aldrich, director of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, estimated that this 1,164-pound meteorite must have had a force of at least 20,000,000 foot-pounds when it struck the earth. There was no evidence of a crater in the formations in which the iron was discovered, and the surface of the meteorite is surprisingly free from any evidence of an impact of this order of magnitude.

A possible explanation is that it fell some distance from the point where it was found, and either bounced or rolled to the place where it finally came to rest. There is also a possibility that the impact with the earth was cushioned by deep snow or loose sand.

Fossil Finds

Fossil remains of fishes that lived in the salt-water sea extending from the Arctic to the Gulf of Mexico about 100,000,000 years ago were collected this summer by Dr. D. H. Dunkle, Smithsonian Institution paleontologist.

These were obtained from deposits representing a former ancient sea bottom in what is now eastern Wyoming.

The ocean fauna of this era, the Cretaceous period of geological history, apparently were closely related to living forms. Unlike mammals, fishes have changed relatively little through the intervening eons. Notable among this summer's collections were bones of large fishes which may have been related remotely to the present-day tarpons, common along the Florida coast and in the Gulf of Mexico.

Some types had long snouts, extensions of their upper jaws which may be compared to the "swords" of swordfish, and others had long, bony extensions of their lower jaws.

Most prized of the specimens obtained this summer, however, were the skull and lower jaws of a marine turtle of the Cretaceous sea. It was a creature not unlike the sea turtles of today, somewhere between three and four feet in length.

From Green River shale formations in northeastern Utah, Dr. Dunkle obtained about 400 fossil specimens of fresh-water fish of a much later period—the early Eocene about 50,000,000 years ago, when the present fish families were becoming differentiated. The deposits were laid down in a fresh-water lake.

BELL Coat-of-Arms

By MABEL LOUISE KEECH

Bell

CHRISTMAS BELLS ARE RINGING!! And they are ringing in this 1948 Christmas story. One year we had the Christmas tree, deer, and star; another, candles; last year, holly; and now BELLS.

In the April, 1944, issue of HOBBIES, when bells were featured through the entire magazine, we wrote about a Bell Coat-of-Arms, and mainly about the great Alexander Graham Bell. This time it was not our intention to speak of him—but—in the morning mail came a picture post card from a friend who knows of my card collection. It was a modest but cozy little home, and under the picture: "The Bell Homestead, where the telephone was first conceived, Brantford, Ontario, Canada." This friend's husband, incidentally is an executive in the Illinois Bell Telephone Company office, in Chicago. They were just in time with this card.

The description, or "blazon of this Coat-of-Arms, in Heraldic terms, is: Gules a chevron between three bells argent. Crest, A falcon rising proper. Motto: Nec quaerere honorem nec spernere. The code lines represent a red shield, and the plain surface on the chevron and bells show they are silver. The crest is a falcon of natural color, or "proper," starting to fly. The motto is translated "Neither to seek nor despise honor," and although not granted to the Bell family, according to the authorities, could have been, and legitimately so, adopted by them because of friendship between them and others who used the motto—or just because they desired to take it unto themselves.

The chevron, "likened unto the roof of a house," is emblematical of protecting the defenseless. The falcon symbolizes one eager in the pursuit of an object much desired. Red signifies courage and magnanimity; silver, sincerity and peace.

A custom of Heraldry, very popular and interesting, was "canting"—or as we would say: "punning." It is the canting or singing out of the name of the person through the symbol on the shield. As heraldic symbols, bells typify "the supposed power of church bells to disperse evil spirits in the air, and as to their invocation of guardian angels."

In the April, 1944, story, there was an error about the crest. We wrote as though there were no crest, and gave the reason for there not being one, but there was one in the picture! The writer was obliged to send in a different sketch than was intended, after the written copy was in. No harm done. That crest was also a falcon rising, and it was issuing from a ducal coronet, meaning that the original bearer of the crest had seen some service such as host or secretary to the duke in the royal court.

The difference between the two shields, was, that the field was blue instead of red; there was a fesse, or horizontal band instead of a chevron, which was of ermine, and the bells were gold. These variations simply show that there were different branches of the family who settled in other parts of the country, wishing an identification; or that one branch had new achievements granted them.

The sponsor for this article, who furnished the description of the Coat-of-Arms, had very little definite information to send about her husband's family, but she did know that the first family came into Abbeyville District, S. C. from North Ireland in 1787. From there descendants went into Virginia, Pennsylvania and Ohio. They were Reformed Presbyterians and Associate Reformed Presbyterians. By profession, mostly farmers, "arranging their farmsteads artistically." Older boys attended school in the winter months. Until the present generation, family names of John, William, James, Samuel and Thomas were retained in nearly every family. Her son was a Lieut. Colonel in the late war.

Mrs. Bell, who resides in Winfield, Iowa, also sends this general material on the ancient family. "The first record of Bells is in Dumfrieshire in southern Scotland, where they were established before 1300. They were reputed to be of Anglo-Norman origin. Bell clans were among those who submitted to the English at Annandale. In 1597 they were listed as 'certain broken clans' of Dumfrieshire. They were among borderers who gallantly bore the sword in defense of their fatherland. The Scotch people for 100 years or more after 1600, A.D., settled with their wives and families in Ulster, northern Ireland. They long suffered under the burdens of civil and religious oppression. They were Presbyterians, and the bishops and landlords tried to stamp out Presbyterianism—burning homes and killing many of the people.

"Those who came to America to seek peace, were called Scotch-Irish; Irish only geographically because racially the Scotch in Ireland remained Scotch. Scotch settlers in north Ireland were from the lowlands, and were hereditary foes of the English, and engaged in many border wars. As a rule they were of fair height, long-legged, strongly built with no tendency to become stout; eyes bright; features regular, cheeks prominent. They were the tallest in stature in all Britain."

George Bell Sr. came from Glasgow to Philadelphia about 1760. In 1767 he settled in Fermanagh township, which was later in Mifflin Co., but had been both in Cumberland and Northumberland Cos. It was largely forest, and therefore good hunting country—and also good Indian country—as many found out to their sorrow.

George Bell, though coming to this country to avoid the unsettled conditions in Scotland, found himself in an unsettled situation here—but was glad to take up arms against those trying to force unreasonable taxation and other injustices on one colony. He was Captain of the 8th Company of the 5th Battalion of the Cumberland Co. Associations (militia) in 1777 and 1778. He was in service between the Schuylkill and Delaware Rivers in 1778.

"Founders of the Bell Family" by Raymond M. Bell gives this information on George Bell, and lists several generations of his descendants.

Bell was of the clan of Macmillan. "The name 'Mac Illemhaoil' or Macmillan is in Islay, and also in Kintrye, rendered as 'Bell.'"

Many of this name have been authors. Here are a few, with their subjects:

H. I. and C. C. Bell, Welsh poets. Sir Charles Bell, anatomy and philosophy. Chas. Henry Bell, around 1863, on history of New Hampshire. Chas. Napier Bell, on fur trading in Canada and northern Minnesota. Chas. Hayden Bell, U. of Chicago, and Columbia U. presses, on German epics. Edward Price Bell, on the staff of the Chicago Daily News about 1925, on the future of the Philippines, Symposium—"World Chancellors," etc. Herbert Charles Bell, on histories of many Pennsylvania counties. Major Horace Bell (1830-1868), "Reminiscences or a ranger"—Southern California stories. John Bell (1795-1831) of the British Theatre, edited many plays, and compiled an historical dictionary of the gods and heroes of antiquity. Another John Bell (1798-1860), a congressman of Tennessee, received much publicity in his interest in a naval appropriation bill.

Landon Covington Bell compiled many Virginia records that were published by the State Library Board, about 1930. Raymond Martin Bell, besides his genealogy on the family, wrote several Pennsylvania county histories. Samuel Bell (1770-1850) was governor of New Hampshire from 1819-1823, and contributed much to the annals of his state.

In the '47 "WHO'S WHO," there were 45 Bells listed—a goodly proportion for one name.

So—here's a Merry Christmas to the Bells. May the Joy-bells of Christmas ring anew in the hearts of all of you.

From Correspondence

Probably no one name after it has appeared in this column has brought so much correspondence from those bearing the name, as that of Johnston, in the Sept. '48 issue. Letters have come from several states, and one in particular was most interesting, as it was from the wife of the 2nd cousin of the sponsor, C. Burr Gavin-James Burr Johnston. You see the Burr name still follows through the family, because Aaron Burr was kind to one of the ancestors.

Crest Corner

The greatest joy that comes to me in this work, is the friendships I make with correspondents as well with those whom I contact personally. There are those who tell me interesting things about their town or locality; those who tell fascinating stories about their immediate family; those who say why they are intrigued with the subject; those who make possible other new friendships; those who invite me to their homes if I am in their vicinity; those who return to me time after time if a new interest or problem comes their way. One who can answer to all of these is Mrs. Alice Hirtle, who has the "Ship's Bell" antique shop in Harwich, Mass., on the Cape, each summer. My reason for singling her out is that she may be of help to you some time. She always tells me about Evanston and Chicago people whom she would like me to meet. Tonight I telephoned one of these homes. The gentleman of the house answered. When I told him she had said fine things about them, he replied that he could reciprocate—that she is one of the most honest antique dealers he knows—that when she makes a statement about any of her wares, you know she knows, and that she is right; and she goes out of her way to give you the best information she can. Mrs. Hirtle is an inveterate reader of HOBBIES—and will she be surprised when she reads this?

My files are bulging with names of those of you who have been my fine correspondent friends through the years, as you have turned to this column to satisfy your interest in Genealogy and Heraldry. It is to you —and to those of you who are going to be such friends as I spoke of above —that I send—through the Crest Corner—my heartiest greetings, and my sincere wish for a Christmas of peace and joy!

ALL THE BEST DOG POEMS, collected by Edwin Burtis. Published by Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York 16, N. Y. 231 pages, illustrated. Price $3.50.

If you are like most people, you like dogs, and if you are as fond of them as Edwin Burtis who has a house and yard full of chihuahuas, you will undoubtedly want to read his collection of ALL THE BEST DOG POEMS.

Fifteen years ago Burtis received Burges Johnson's poem "Contentment," from a fellow dog fancier. Burtis enjoyed it so much that he began collecting dog poetry. To date he has several hundred dog poems; over one hundred and fifty of these appear in his volume. Burtis selected only the best dog poems for his work. Included in the group are Shakespeare's "Theseus and Hippolyta," Robert Browning's "The Cardinal and the Dog," John Galsworthy's "To My Dog", William Wordsworth's "Fidelity", Lord Byron's "Epitaph to a Dog", Rachel Field's "The Animal Store", Thomas Hardy's "The Mongrel", and many, many others by the masters of rhyme.

The brown and white engravings in the book are superbly done by Nils Hogner, the famous animal artist. He sketched almost every breed of dog in existence for the book — including the "mixed" species, and reflected in their faces just about every dog mood imaginable.—E. G.

YANKEE AUCTIONEER by George H. Bean, published by Little, Brown, and Company, 34 Beacon St., Boston, Massachusetts. 247 pages. Price $2.75.

This entertaining book holds a large store of information about the auctioneering business in New England as told through the personal experiences of George T. Bean, one of the most familiar figures in the trade. For more than a quarter of a century he has been traveling all the way from Maine to Virginia, selling Queen Anne mirrors, oriental rugs, cobblers' and sailmakers' benches, nail kegs, and even apple parers.

A variety of occupations came before he finally settled down to auctioneering, including clerking in a general store, newspaper reporting, and playing bit parts in the Northampton Academy of Music. It was this theatre experience, particularly, which gave him training in gestures and timing, and has helped him to become an expert in his field.

Mr. Bean's enthusiasm for his work, and keen observations of people from his position behind the block, make this an interesting book for collectors and hobbyists.

THE BOOK OF FINE PRINTS by Carl Zigrosser. Published by Crown Publishers, 419 4th Ave., New York, N. Y. 499 Pages. Illustrated. Price $5.00.

Whether your interest lies exclusively in the art being produced by our modern and experimental schools, or your choice is to turn back some one thousand years to the earliest stone rubbings found in the caves of China, Mr. Zigrosser's anthology of prints in an authoritative guide. This richly illustrated book presents an excellent opportunity for us to widen our visual experiences — so generous is the material given of the best in European, Oriental and American prints.

All types of print-making are fully described: etchings, woodcuts, aquatints, mezzotints, engraving and lithograph work — each holding a segment of history within itself; each being a part of the majestic and continuous tradition of print-making. These prints are wisely discussed in relation to their own times, giving a clearer understanding of the artistic changes that link such diverse periods as the Gothic era and the Renaissance; the ancient Dynasties of the Far East and our twentieth century.

Along with his discussion of technique and method, there are many valuable notes for collectors, such as sizes, scarcity factors, signatures and other identification essentials. And for the more casual readers, these pages, interspersed with glimpses into the personalities of those who created these memorable pieces of work, will bring a welcome stimulus to delve further into the study of the graphic art of the world.

THE HISTORY OF THE EARLIER YEARS OF DRUG AND ALLIED TRADES IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLY. Privately Printed, St. Louis, Missouri, 159 Pages, Illustrated. By A. C. Meyer.

One of the best books of industrial autobiography that has come to our desk for a long time is the 500 limited edition of "The History of Earlier Years of Drug Trade in the Mississippi Valley", by the veteran wholesale druggist, A. C. Meyer.

Mr. Meyer is the retired head of a great business, one of the leaders in the important wholesale center of St. Louis. He relates the coming of his grandfather, absolutely penniless, from Germany, and his launching the business just as a retail drug store in Fort Wayne, Indiana, his subsequent removal to St. Louis to embark in the wholesale business and its growth with America itself.

It is a splendid piece of future Americana. The late Mrs. Meyer was one of our foremost bell collectors.

GEM CUTTING. By J. Daniel Willem. Published by The Manual Arts Press Peoria, Illinois. 224 pages. Price $3.50

Here is a book written by the confirmed hobbyist for those who need guidance in this fascinating art of gem cutting, or for those who are casting about for a hobby that it is satisfying to man's creative instinct, and one also that may be remunerative if desired.

The introduction reveals the sincerity of the author and a charming style of narrative. We quote only a part:

"We were walking on the beach. The tide was falling and high seas were running. There was no storm, no wind to speak of; only a gently drizzling rain, continuous and steady.

"Long curling waves rushed in from the open ocean moving forward with a fateful force that could be positively felt. After each wave was spent, there was a retreat of rushing water which exposed the sea gravel, freshly washed and glistening.

"The beach was gravel, coarse and fine. The pebbles rolled under the turbulent water, then slowly came to rest as the waves retreated. We were walking near the water's edge scanning the pebbles, those little rounded stones pounded and ground into shape on the ocean floor, and now tossed up to rest upon the open beach.

"It was my keen, nature-loving wife who saw a small pebble that looked definitely more attractive than the rest. She picked it up and handed it to me, as many a woman had done before. That was the beginning of a hobby that has grown with the years and now is represented by a collection of hundreds of beautiful gem stones, all collected in the rough and cut by myself. Love for the beautiful in nature had now discovered a never-ending source of supply as well as a stimulus.

"That small pebble was taken to the government agent on this dreary Indian reservation for information. He pronounced it a 'California moonstone.' That, I learned later, was a misnomer; the correct and more truly poetic name is chalcedony.

"The agent reached up to one of his shelves and took down several glass jars filled with agate and chalcedony pebbles, all gathered by the Indians on that beach. We bought a handful for a small sum — and were on our way to collecting."

The author wastes no words in giving his readers facts and principles of his hobby and the text is amply illustrated. Here are a few of the chapter headings: Gem Materials, The Art of Cutting and Polishing, The Technique of Sawing, The Technique of Rough Grinding, The Technique of Finish Grinding, The Technique of Sanding, The Technique of Polishing, Facet-cut Gems, The Optical Properties of Gem Materials, Sawing and Roughing Out the Gem Crystal for Facet Cutting, Special Lapidary Techniques, Diamond Cutting, and The Willems Faceting Device. In all, there are 24 chapters, all good information for the amateur or professional hobbyist in the gem collecting field.

$200,000 For Foster Memorial

Tallahassee, Fla., Oct. 26. — The cabinet today released $200,000 for construction of a museum at the Stephen Foster Memorial on the Suwannee River.

The museum will be constructed at White Springs. The money was released from a $500,000 appropriation by the 1947 legislature.

Retired Supreme Court Justice Armstead Brown, a member of the Memorial Commission, said the money will "pay big dividends in tourist trade."

Gate towers have already been constructed and 243 acres of the park site fenced. The park is named in honor of the author of many Southern folk songs.

'Match Box Labels of the World'

By A. J. Cruse

The coloured labels adorning the familiar matchbox have been in use for more than a century, since John Walker, an English chemist, gave the world its first friction match in 1826. They have portrayed an ever-increasing variety of subjects, colours and designs, from glamorous women to nursery rhymes, historical scenes to beast and fishes. These labels are now much sought after by collectors all over the world who enjoy a hobby which is even older than stamp collecting, offering an equally wide range of colourful and interesting material. "Match Box Labels of the World" will introduce beginners to a delightful hobby, provide a work of reference for experienced collectors; while the subject, being both original and full of interest, should have a wide appeal to the general public.

16 half-tone plates and 8 colour plates reproducing 64 rare and interesting labels

Contains a History of Fire-making Appliances from Primitive Man to the Modern Match, together with a History of the World's Labels.

The book is dedicated to King Farouk of Egypt for his co-operation in furnishing data and labels on the Egyptian match industry.

The cheap and serviceable match doomed the snuff habit,—people took to smoking tobacco instead of snuffing it. This book is of rare, historical importance for the foregoing reason.

FAIN WHITE KING, Editor Gems and Minerals Department

JADE OF MANY COLORS

By JAMES L. KRAFT

There must be a little of the missionary spirit in all true hobbyists. If we cannot sell others on the idea that ours is certainly the most absorbing and rewarding of all possible hobbies, each of us is at least entitled to think so. And most of us, I think, like to keep reminders of our chosen avocation close at hand, mostly to please ourselves, but partly perhaps to interest the passerby so that he too may be moved to join our particular fraternity.

I belong to that large, rapidly growing, and enthusiastic clan of hobbyists proud to be known as "rock-hounds." I have been one all my life from the time I was old enough to pick bright pebbles, enjoy their look and feel, and put my imagination to work on how they came to be so beautiful. Specifically, I am a rock-hound devoted to work with, and study of, jade — the mineral material which fascinates me above all others.

So much has jade fascinated me that I devoted much time through a great many years to proving that this mysterious and lovely stone did and does exist on this continent — to be found by those who will look for it with enough zeal and devotion in their hearts. It was my pleasure a couple of years ago to write a book about my hobby — "Adventure in Jade", relating some experiences I have had with it. And the adventure itself is by no means finished. New discoveries are constantly opening up before me — there could hardly be time in a dozen lifetimes to uncover all of the mystery of jade on this continent alone.

One of the several cabinets of jade in the famous collection of James L. Kraft, one of the nation's most successful business men.

The jade pieces which I keep in my office are only a few, relatively, of all that have come from my workshop — or from the workshops of the truly great jade artists of the past — but each of them marks an adventure for me. And each of them serves, during the hours of any busy day, to delight and refresh me. If they also delight and refresh some of the numerous callers who look at them curiously each day in my office, that is so much to the good. That satifies such missionary zeal as may be in me.

Over the past forty years, my office has housed a good many collections — from fossil fish to early Ming teapots. Each cherished collection has been arranged and re-arranged a great many times, always to tell its story more directly or eloquently to me.

I have just recently undertaken a major operation in this direction — arranging, setting, lighting and otherwise preparing cases which house approximately 300 American jade pieces in as many different colors and shades, a modest but breathtaking beautiful collection of carved jade pieces from the great jade-carving area of China, and some 20 to 25 fluorescent minerals which, under proper lighting, take on an Aladdin's lamp kind of magic.

Among the jade pieces, a purist attempting to make a catalogue would find some odd and irrelevant object, I think — a few specimens of ancient Egyptian glass, an example or two of early Babylonian hieroglyphics. To the purist this would seem deplorable — but I am no purist; I am a hobbyist. And I put into my office cabinets objects that have meaning and beauty for me with a reckless disregard of periods, eras, and fashions. Nature herself, preparing the raw materials for the workshops of rock-hounds, does the same!

If ever a true hobbyist gets a display, a cabinet, or a collection absolutely complete and perfect, with nothing else to be done to it — he might as well seek another hobby. Divine discontent is as characteristic of your hobbyist as the incurable curiosity which started him off in the first place. I never expect to get my collections or displays to suit me exactly. Half the fun is trying.

Although I would never attempt to dissuade a man from his own particular hobby, I do think it worthy of the attention of any hobbyist to consider that the collection of rocks, and working with minerals, is a hobby which can be undertaken with pleasure anywhere in the world, whether a man has a lean or fat pocketbook. Stones, happily, are everywhere — fascinating, beautiful, mysterious, there for the taking. In every section of the United States, there will be found some gem stones, some semi-precious stones of equally great beauty, and a myriad common everyday stones which have their own fascinations. A number of accurate guides to where such stones may be found, and how to distinguish them are available to interested laymen. Some states, of course, are richer than others in providing precious and semi-precious stones for the rock explorer. But all of them have some.

Jade, which is the stone I prize above all others, is found mostly on this continent on both the eastward and westward slopes of the Rocky Mountains — and on the Pacific Coast in scattered areas from Alaska southward all the way. It has been my pleasure to discover some of these spots where jade, once thought not to exist on this continent at all, is found in place. And I have found much more if it — in widely ranging shades — in the form of boulders in float on rocky slopes of the far west.

One of the features of my office display of American jade which often comes as a surprise to visitors is the almost endless color variation. In the popular mind, all jade is green. This is a curious misconception, for of all the stones of earth, jade shows the widest variation in color and shade, ranging from deepest black to purest white. This is part of its great fascination. It must also have been a part of its fascination for the great artists of long ago in China, for they drew the inspiration for many of their designs from the colors present in the jade with which they worked.

I call my office collection of the American jade specimens which I have prepared in my home workshop "Jade of Many Colors." It is literally that. From black to white they range, with every color of the rainbow in between — ink, yellow, lavendar, brown, grey — greens of a dozen shades and variations. As an amateur lapidary, I have taken special pleasure in cutting and polishing jade in the workshop. From the outside, a piece of rough jade is likely to be a most unprepossessing object—encased in a tough, resistant rind of white granite or some other material fused to it by great heat when the world was young. You never know what you will find within a rough piece of jade. Somtimes you are disappointed in either the quality of the stone, or the color. But sometimes you are rewarded with quality and color of such dazzling beauty as to make a whole night's work the merest trifle.

Although all colors of jade have been known in China from the very dawn of civilization, the white and black prized most highly—our American jades show some distinctive color shadings. There is a bright, grass green characteristic of some of the best Wyoming jade — a very pale melon green has been found both in Colorado and California. Alaska's best specimens of jade are likely to be found in dark, rich olive greens. The only true grey jade I have ever seen comes from Wyoming — and if you like subtle colors, it is beautiful indeed.

There is one jade in my office which never fails to fascinate my visitors. It is a huge water-washed boulder of brilliant green nephrite jade, rescued for me from a cave on the Pacific shore near Monterey, California. How many ages of time Nature took to polish that particular piece of jade, with wind and water and patience, I am not prepared to say. As aeons go, it is a formidable length of time. The piece itself is exquisite — so beautiful that nobody can look at it without wanting to go and touch it. I keep it out in the open for this express purpose.

Part of the great joy of all beautiful stones — and this is particularly true of jade, the toughest stone of them all — is the feel to the fingers. Jade is always cool and smooth, to the hand; to touch it is to understand why the great lords and ladies of ancient China kept jade "fingering pieces" always ready to their touch.

I like to look at the boulder myself — I like to touch it. But more than this, I like to have that boulder close at hand because that water-swept cave at Monterey makes a special appeal to my imagination. Could any pirate's store of treasures equal a cave of gems carved out by Nature herself,

Although my primary interest in the workshop is American jade, I do take great pleasure—as no one could fail to do — in the carved jade pieces of ancient China. It was my good fortune to come by several exquisite pieces — a few ceremonial bowls of paper-thin jade of varying colors, a teapot with cups to match, a pair of exquisitely carved doves of mutton-fat jade among them. These I try to keep housed properly in order of time and place in my cabinets, out of respect to the great artists who spent so many years carving them. The beauty of workmanship in ancient carved Chinese jade is unsurpassed anywhere in any medium. It is a lost art — one whose mystery remains even now. How the ancient Chinese managed to work this toughest and most resistant of all stones into objects with the delicacy of finest lace is a subject to make the most earnest modern lapidary humble.

The newest addition to the several collections in my office is an arrangement of fluorescent stones. I I have a good deal of fun showing guests the stones as they look under ordinary daylight or electric light — then showing him the same stones under the double quartz lamps set above the display. Most fluorescent materials are dull affairs by ordinary light — hardly worth a second's glance. But put them under special ultra-violet lights and a piece of authentic magic takes place before your eyes. These common appearing stones leap to life — to brilliant life. The combined colors are dazzling to the eyes — some of them many colored — all of them apparently on fire.

Some fluorescent stones rival the Aurora Borealis — some the rainbow — some the most spectacular sunset you ever saw. Some of them are bright to the point of gaudiness. None of them seems quite believable. Viewing them for the first time, most any man would be entitled to cry "Fraud!" But there is no trick involved — only the great natural magic of special lighting which discriminates and selects colors for your eyes to see.

I should like to have been the first hobbyist to discover that certain minerals — and certain other common objects, among them flue dust, fluoresce under certain conditions. He must have felt exactly like Aladdin with his magic lamp. The discovery of fluorescent stones is relatively new — not longer ago, I should say, than ten or fifteen years. In my collection, I have 20 - 25 fluorescent minerals — their fires ranging from bright unearthly yellow to red purple. Gaudy as some of them undoubtedly are, reprehensibly gay perhaps in this sorry world — they are an amazing and fascinating study. For genuine fireworks in any display of stores, I can recommend fluorescent stones, with proper lights of course. They never fail to bring the house down. Looking for fluorescent stones can be an exciting pastime too, and several noteworthy specimens are found in widely scattered sections of the nation — from New Jersey to California.

Altogether the pursuit of stones — and working with them in a lapidary shop — is an avocation whose rewards and satisfactions cannot be estimated by any scale I know. Turn where you will on this earth, there are stones to your hand and your imagination. Their beauty, their mystery, their endless charm can never be fully explored by any one man. To discover even a small portion of these qualities in a single kind of stone is the most exciting experience I know. And to keep some material proofs of the work you have done — in office or home cabinet — is to re-live part of the excitement at any moment when your eye lights on a cherished object.

Any hobbyist worthy of the name deserves to keep this kind of delight to his soul right out where he can see it. If he makes some converts that way, he can ask for nothing more.

PLAYING CARDS

Maps and Specific Locations on Playing Cards

By BRUCE SPENCER

Collectors of playing cards, making a specialty of pictures and other decoration on the backs of the cards, refer to this as card-back collecting, a comparatively new hobby, probably followed not over twenty-five years to any extent. This differs from the much older idea of collecting complete decks, which has been followed hundreds of years, as evidenced by the collections of very old cards now in museums. A card-back collector is satisfied to preserve only one card from each different deck, so far as the back design is concerned. He may also preserve in separate collections different jokers and spade aces.

This has all come about because of the many improvements in printing during the past seventy-five years. Offset and color lithograph printing methods have made it possible to reproduce copies of wall size pictures on the backs of the playing cards. People everywhere are very fond of beautiful pictures. When you add to this the history and mystery of the playing cards you understand why this hobby is of interest to so many thousands of children and adults throughout the world.

Maps on the Card Backs

These are designed to help sell the decks to tourists at well known places of interest. In most cases the cards can be purchased only at or near the locations shown. Here are a few—Prout Neck, Maine—Gateway to Fort Ticonderoga—Nantucket Island—Cape Cod—Lake Geneva, Wis., Coast of Maine near Portland.

Larger areas are also shown—States of New Jersey—Maryland—Florida—Southern and Northern California—Eastern and Western Hemispheres—United States—Mexico and Central America and Panama Canal. This card advertises the United Fruit Co. Steamship Line—North and South America—Another of South America advertising the Delta Steamship Line. A card featuring a flat map of the world

Specific Locations—Statues and Monuments

The following decks have been on sale generally—Statue of Liberty—Washington Monument at Washington, D. C. Quite a few other Washington, D. C., decks including the Capitol—White House—Japanese Cherry Trees in bloom. A rare deck featuring Washington Monument at Baltimore—Statue of St. Louis—Lincoln Statue at Lincoln Park, Chicago—the two lions in front of the Art Institute, Chicago—Pilgrim Monument at Provincetown, Mass.

Decks Featuring Historical Scenes

Playing Card Manufacturers have issued a vast number of different decks of all manner of Nationally known Scenery—Many of these are copies of well-known Paintings by famous Artists — Yosemite Falls — Bridal Veil Falls—Falls of the Yellowstone—Old Faithful Geyser—Bryce Canyon—Various views of Niagara Falls—Black Hawks Head, Wisconsin Dells — Standing Rock, — Mount Rainier — Old Man of the Mountains, N. H.—French Creek in the Black Hills—Natural Bridge of Virginia—Arch Rock, Mackinac Island—Caverns of Luray, Va.—Cave of the Mounds, Wis. Sand Dunes of Cape Cod—Canadian Rockies—Kaolin in the Ozarks—Taku Glacier, Alaska—Scenes in Death Valley—Mount Hood National Forest—Diamond Head, Hawaii—Catskill Mountains—Shenandoah National Park—Redwood Forest—Hills of Vermont—Gateway to the Garden of the Gods—Lookout Mountains.

Decks Featuring National Scenes

Plymouth Rock—Faneuil Hall Market—Old State House, Boston—Independence Hall, Phil. and another of Liberty Bell—Mount Vernon, Home of Washington—Monticello, Home of Jefferson — Capital at Williamsburg — Washington Headquarters at Valley Forge—French Quarters at New Orleans—Birthplace of Eugene Field, St. Louis.

It is impossible in this issue to mention numerous points of historical interest in many foreign countries, especially in England, Europe and Asia—A large collection of playing cards will contain many such card-backs.

It has been estimated that a half million school children in the U. S. A. are at all times collecting playing cards as a hobby. They trade with each other and this makes it possible for them to soon have five hundred to a thousand different cards.

Many of the children write card manufacturers requesting them to send sample cards free. This, of course, cannot be done as sample cards are used only by Salesmen calling upon the retail trade. Sample cards cannot be distributed to the general public free, or even sold as samples, principally because of the Internal Revenue Tax on playing cards.

Lately some of the manufacturers have placed upon the retail market backs of regular cards containing 54 cards with the backs all different. These backs are taxed by the Internal Revenue Dept., the same as regular playing card decks, even though card games cannot be played with them—13 cents for each 54 cards.

The latest development in the business is to issue packs of 54 cards of different back designs but with no hearts, diamonds, clubs or spades—no face cards or jokers—just blank cards on the paying side. No Internal Revenue Tax is necessary on these packs, and they can be sold at a much lower price than the regular playing cards.

The children appear to be satisfied with these as trading cards—however, they are not really playing cards and therefore are of no interest whatever to adult collectors who naturally are interested only in the real article, for their collections. They are simply picture cards, the same shape and size and same paper and beautiful printing as playing cards.

There are probably about five thousand adult collectors of playing cards in the U. S. A. at the present time—and many in foreign countries. Their collections contain mostly from five thousand to twenty-five thousand different types, but some contain many more. A great deal of trading by mail is done by the adult collectors—no money changing hands between them. The Internal Revenue Dept., has ruled there is no tax necessary in trading as the tax is based upon the sale of the playing cards.

Quite a few of these adult collectors also are building up collections of full decks of the more unusual types. Very little trading of full decks is done as it is seldom a collector secures duplicates of these unusual or foreign decks.

—o—

The bulletin of the Art Institute of Chicago recently announced an exhibition of a collection of rare playing cards belonging to Mrs. William A. Nitze. The exhibit was entitled "The History of Playing Cards".

This type of playing card, issued for Gillette Safety Razor Co., was popular for advertising about 1900.

Notes of the Chicago Antiques Exposition and Hobby Fair

This year's Chicago Antiques Exposition and Hobby Fair, held at the Stevens Hotel, October 8-13, overflowed into the lobby outside the exhibition hall after all available space in the hall proper had been alotted.

As usual on the opening day a huge crowd lined up at the ticket office well in advance of the official opening hour of 11 A.M. Coming the greatest distance to exhibit was W. R. DuBois of California who specializes in buttons.

Warren E. Buck, who commutes between Africa and New Jersey, bringing back specimens from the dark continent for the zoos of this country, and curios for collectors, occupied a booth which featured some of his collection of native African masks. His exhibit has attracted much attention through the many years that he has been exhibiting this primitive art of Africa.

Glancing through the Subscription book in HOBBIES booth near the gate entrance, California was represented by a visit from Mrs. Robert McCurdy of Berkeley, and Dr. Robert Thornburg of Long Beach. Mrs. Timothy Cloran of Eugene, Ore., signed up in like manner and so did A. D. Bolm of Austin, Tex.

Archie Furr, one of the trustees of the Lightner Foundation, and Mrs. Furr, of Lincoln, Neb., and some of their friends attended. The Furrs took home some outstanding teapots to add to their already exceptionally large and fine collection.

Fain White King, editor of HOBBIES' Gems and Minerals Department, and Mrs. King, took time out from their busy lives to greet old friends again at the show, and also to add to their collections. The Kings occupy a fine old mansion in Cairo, Ill., which is made all the more charming by the addition of period pieces.

In the Miniaturia Department of this issue, Joseph Gray, who held open house in his booth for the miniaturia fans, tells of some of the visiting collectors of tinies. Mr. Gray predicts that the show next year will take on greater impetus because of the growing interest in this branch of collecting.

Francis E. Croarkin, 86 years old, and former member of the Chicago Board of Education, was one of the oldest visitors.

Many visitors called at HOBBIES office to remark on the beauty of the exhibits and the varied and high quality of the merchandise offered. It did seem that this was one of the most beautiful shows ever.
